Both tops are hummocks on the huge dome of Ararat, like the humps on the back of a camel, on neither one of which is there a vestige of anything but snow. "There remained just as little trace of the crosses left by Parrot and Chodzko, as of the ark lisself. We remembered the pio-tures we had seen in our nursery books, which represented this mountain-top cov-ered with green grass, and noah stepping out of the ark, in the bright, warm sunshine before the receding waves, and now we looked around and saw this very spot covered with perpetual snow. Nor did we see any exi-dence whatever of a former existing crater, except perhaps the snow-filled depression we have just mentioned. All detail was lest-all color, all outline; even the surrounding meuntains seemed to be but excressent ridges of the plain. Then, too, we could catch only oc-casional glimpses, as the clouds shifted to and fro. At one time they opened up be-neath us, and revealed the Aras valley with its glittering ribbon of silver at an abyasmal depth below. Now and then we could descry the black volcanic peaks of All Ghez, forty miles away to the northwest. Caucasus, the mountains about Erzerum on the west, and Lake Van on the south, and even of the Caspian sea, all of which are said to be in Ararat's horizon, we could see absolutely nothing. "We were suddenly aroused by the rum-bling of thunder below us. A storm was rolling rapidly up the southeast slope of the mountain. The atmosphere seemed to be boiling over the heated plain below. Higher and higher came the clouds, rolling and seething among the grim crags along the chasm, and soon we were caught in its em-brace. The thermometer dropped at once below freezing point, and the dense mists, driven against us by the hurricane, formed icicles on our blistered faces, and froze the ink in our fountain pens. Our summer cloth-ing was wholly inadequate for such an un-expected experience; we were chilled to the bone. To have remained where we were would have been jeopardizing our health, if not our lives. Although we could scarcely see far enough ahead to follow back on the track by which we had ascended, yet we were obliged to attempt it at once, for the storm around us was increasing every mo-

"Carefully peering through the clouds, we managed to follow the trail we had made along the gradually sloping summit, to the head of the great chasm, which now ap-peared more terrible than ever. We here saw that it would be extremely perilous, if not actually impossible, to attempt a descent on the rocks along its treacherous edge in such a hurricane. It was a thrilling experience; we seemed to be salling through the air itself, for the clouds obscured the slope even twenty feet below. Finally we emerged beneath them into the glare of the afternoon sunlight, but on we dashed for 6,000 feet, leaning heavily on the trailing stocks, which threw up an icy spray in our wake. We never once stopped until we reached the bottom of the dome, at our last night's camp among the rocks.

SHORT ON COAL.

Street Railway Company May Be Com-pelled to Shut Down Some Lines.

It was reported in street rallway circles yesterday that the company expected to be forced to shut down the Harney street power house early next week on account of the curtailment of the coal supply. The rumor was freely circulated among the conductors and motormen, and some of them were in expectation of receiving notice of an indefinite lay off. According to the street railway officials this report was premature. Superintendent Smith and Secretary Goodrich both agreed that up to date no such determination had been arrived at. They had been very for-tunate in obtaining coal thus far, and had enough ahead at the present time to last about ten days. If the coal famine lasted much longer they might be seriously emabout barrassed, but no more so than other es-tablishments which required large supplies of coal.

If it should be necessary to shut down any part of the system it is believed that the Harney street establishment would be the first to be föle. This house furnishes the power for the cable and the Harney street motor lines and as only one of these is considered a paying institution the shut down would naturally take effect there if anywhere. It is also argued that the sus-pension of these lines would not be so great a hardship on the public as that of the longer lines which reach people who reside at a greater distance from the center of the city.

The night was spent in a Kurdish encamp Leaves CHICAGO, BURLINGTON & Q.IAITIVES Omaha Depot 19th and Mason Sts. | Omaha ment, which the writers describe with inter-esting detail. In the morning, when they resumed the journey, the ascent became steeper and more difficult, and they say they could not but wonder how Noah ever managed with the animals from the ark. At 7,500 feet they met the highest Kurdish encamp-ment on their line of ascent. At 8,000 feet they struck the first snow-drift, and the donkeys had to be half carried across. At 10 o'clock, at an altitude of 9,000 feet, lunch was eaten in a quiet mountain gien, by the side of a rippling rill.

At this point the muleteers and the zaptiehs gave up and would go no farther; so Messrs. Allen and Sachtleben and the old Messrs. Allen and Sachtleben and the old Austrian took a small blanket, a felt mat, two long, stout ropes, enough food to last two days, a bottle of cold tea, and a can of Turkish raki, and at half-past 2 o'clock in the afternoon started bravely out. Up they climbed over the rough rocks and the deep snow unt'l nearly 6 o'clock, when they had reached a height of 11,000 feet.

"Here the thermometer registered 39 de grees Fahrenheit and was constantly falling. ously engaged, we introduce the situation. "Over the vast and misty panorama that spread out before us the lingering rays of the setting sun shed a tinge of gold, which was communicated to the snowy beds around us. Behind the peak of Little Ararat a brilliant rainbow stretched in one grand archway above the weeping clouds. But this was only one turn of nature's kaleldo-scope. The arch soon faded away, and the shadows lengthened and deepened across the plain and mingled, till all was lost to view behind the falling curtains of the night. behind the failing curtains of the night. The Kurdish tents far down the slope and the white curling smoke from their evening camp fires, we could see no more; only the occasional bark of a dog was borne upward through the impenetrable darkness. "We turned in together under our single blanket, with the old gentleman between us. He had put on every article of clothing, in-cluding gloves, hat, hood, cloak and heavy shoes. For pillows we used the provision bags and camera. The bottle of cold tea we buttoned up in our ccats to prevent it from freezing. On both sides and above us lay the purs white snow; below us a huge abyss, into which the rocky ridge descended like a darkened stairway to the lower regions. The awful stillness was unbroken, save by the whistling of the wind among the rocks. Dark masses of clouds seemed to bear down upon us every now and then, opening up their trap doors and letting down a heavy fail of snow. The heat of our bodies melted the ice beneath us and our clothes became saturated with ice water. Although we were surrounded by snow and ice we were suffering with a burning thirst. Since separating from our companions we had found no water whatever, while the single bottle of cold tea we had must be preserved for the morrow. Sleep under such circumstances and in our cramped position was utterly impossible. At 1 o'clock the morning star peeped above the eastern borizon. This we watched hour after hour, as it rose in unrivaled beauty to-ward the zenith, until at last it began to fade away in the first gray streaks of the morning.

"Just at daybreak, 3:55 a.m., on the Fourth of July, we started off on what proved to be the hardest day's work we had ever accom-plished. We struck out at once across the broad snow field to the second rock rib on the right, which seemed to lead up to the only line of rocks above. The surface of these large snow beds had frozen during the night, so that we had to cut steps with our ice picks to keep from slipping down their glassy surface. Up this ridge we slowly climbed for three weary hours, leap-ing from boulder to boulder or dragging ourselves up their precipitous sides. "We pushed and pulled one another almost to the top and then, with one more des-
