RUNAWAY HORSES IN RUSSIA. A Simple Means by Which the Frightened

horse has a thin cord with a running noose around his neck at the neck strap, and the end is tied to the dashboard? At Rome, says a writer in the New York Commercial, I saw in the Corso a phaeton with two spirited horses bolt. They were driven by a lady, and I expected to see instant destruction. But the lady coolly grasped a thin cord, and within thirty yards the horses came to a full stop. I afterward met the lady at Nice, and expressed surprise at the skill with which she stopped the runaways. She treated it as a trifle, and told me acci-dents from runaway horses are unknown in Russia, as no one but a lunatic would drive without the cords When a horse bolts he always takes the bit in his teeth and the skill of the driver is uscless. The moment the pressure comes on the windpipe the horse knows he has met his master. Your paper speaks to a large audience of men and women who drive, and this letter

THE DIAMOND NECKLACE.

One Sunday morning two young men sat in the smoking room of a cozy apartment. Outside the snow was falling silently in great blue-white flakes. On the divan, his tail and legs ornamented with turts of curly black hair, his body shaved in the improved fashion, a poodle slumbered peacefully, and Floyd Taller, the owner of the premises, attired in a smoking jacket of a horsey plaid, was lolling in an easy chair, his slippered feet stretched toward the fire. His companion, Arthur Van Stade, had been his greatest friend at college, and this was their first meeting in three years. Van Stade in India killing big been game, and had barely escaped having the tables turned, as a large scar across one cheek testified. Tailer had stayed at home, but to him had come the greater change. As he expressed it, he was "a settled down old married man with a family"—which meant that he had the sweetest little wife in the world and a tiny mite of pink-and-white humanity, known in the house as Baby.

"That's rather a fine dog you have there, Arthur," said Van Stade, turning to the codle and lazily looking over the sleepy ani-

"Well I should think so," replied Tailer, 'I don't suppose you will believe me when I tell you that when he came into my possession he was worth no less than $1,000. The spring after you went away," he went on, "having finished my college course, I went over to the other side for the London sea-son. I went to London and in London I stayed long after the time I had allotted to that city had expired. It was there I met Edith. In six weeks we were engaged. The remainder of the summer I passed in Scotland with the family of my fiances. Scotland with the family of my finnese. They had planned to go to Nice when the cold weather came on, and of course I determined to go with them. We went as far as Paris together, but at the last moment I was detained in that city for a few days and was obliged to allow the rest of the party to proceed without me, promising to join them in a week at most.

"I had run short of funds, and the remit-tance expected from my father had not ar-rived. This I did not consider necessary to explain to Edith and her family. I said vaguely that business kept me in Paris. Four days after their departure the letter from my father arrived. He had heard of my engagement and, to my satisfaction, approved of it. Besides the amount expected, he sent an additional $1,000, with which he instructed me to buy a suitable present for Edith. As the modest diamond I had bought for our engagement had been my only gift, I was pleased and gratified with my father's generous present.
"The following morning I started out in scarch of something for my dear girl, whom I should be with the very next day. I visted all the leading jewelry stores on the Avenue de l'Opera, and was so confused by the glittering array of gems spread out to lure the American dollar from wealthy travelers that I could decide on nothing. My $1,000, which had seemed so much, now appeared ridiculously small, and I had almost despaired of finding anything worthy of my cloved when my eyes fell upon an extremely peautiful necklace, consisting of two rows of pearls caught together at intervals by small diamond clasps. It lay in a velvet case of azure blue and the moment I saw it I decided that it was just what I wanted. ' 'Five thousand francs, monsieur,' replied

"Exactly the sum I had to spend! bought it without a moment's hesitation. The little blue box was about to be wrapped up when the salesman discovered some im-perfection in the clasp. He was profuse in his apologies and said that it would be repaired and ready for me the following morning. I explained that this would not do. as I was to leave the city on the night ex-press for Nice. After a moment's hesitation the jeweler promised that I should have it at 6 o'clock without fail.

"As I was leaving the store I noticed a woman standing by my side. I say I noticed a woman; it would be more correct to say that I noticed a beautiful white hand with long taper fingers, on one of which was a diamond of unusual size and brilliancy. In this hand was a small jeweled watch, and as I was leaving the counter I caught a few words spoken in a peculiarly musical voice. I was too full of the thought of Edith's hap-DAIL WAY TIME CADD at the woman's face, and long before I had

> 'At 6 o'clock I returned and, true to his promise, the man had the necklace ready for Placing it in the inside pocket of my coat, I left the store and had just time to complete a few remaining arrangements before going to the station. I bought a first class ticket and tipped the guard, after giving him to understand in my very best French that I did not want him to put ther passengers in my compartment. tucked my traveling rug around my knees opened a French novel, when the door vas opened and a woman hurriedly entered the compartment and took the seat next the window on the other side of the car. 1 glanced at my unwelcome companion granced at my unwelcome companion. She was dressed in mourning of the richest material and in perfect taste. As I was noticing these details something by her side that I had at first taken for a fur cape

It proved to be a black French peodle, and as he sat up and turned his head toward me I saw that around his neck he wore a broad silver collar from which de-pended a peculiar heart-shaped padlock.

"Turning to my novel I soon forgot the in-truders, nor did I again think of them until perhaps half an hour later, when I was startled by feeling something cold and wet pressed against my hand. It was the wet pressed against my hand. It was the poodle's nose. He had crawled across the seat and was evidently desirous of making my acquaintance.

"'Chico, come here,' exclaimed a singularly familiar voice.

"The dog paid no attention to his mistress, but wagged his tail contentedly as I stroked his curly head.
"You must excuse my dog, sir," said my companion. 'He is a great pet and expects every one to notice him. I am afraid he will annoy you.'

'I protested that he would not, and added that I was fond of dogs, poodles in particular. Perhaps my answer was due in part to the fact that the woman was young and very beautiful. I had only that minute become aware of this, the light having been too dim in the station to let me see her face. Her, voice, too, affected me singularly; it was low and sweet and I was sure I had heard it somewhere before. I sat for sometime vainly trying to recall the circumstances of our meeting, but the more I pondered on it the more hopeless seemed the task

"A little later, on looking up. I found that my companion was without books or papers, so taking an illustrated magazine from my satchel I offered it to her. She thanked me satchel I offered it to her. She thanked me and smiled sweetly. After a time I grew tired of my novel and resolved to attempt little conversation with my neighbor. asked her if she was going to Nice. replied that she was, and went on to say that her sister, whom she had expected would go with her, had disappointed her at the last moment. She, however, could not wait until the following day, as her father, who was in Nice for his health, had wired her to return at once.
"She spoke of her dislike for traveling alone, particularly at night, and explained that as the compartment reserved for ladies was full she had been obliged to enter mine. She was sorry to intrude, but the train was about to start and the guard had told her all the other seats were taken. I hastened to assure her that I was glad of the lucky chance that had given me so charming a companion. She smiled and asked me if I was to be long at Nice. She chatted on about the place, mentioning the names of many well known people who, she said, were her friends and whom I should no doubt

As the evening were on she opened a bas-ket containing a dainty lunch. 'Would I share it with her? The cook evidently had a ridiculous idea of her appetite. Why, there was enough for six!' "Soon after this I began to grow drowsy, and as my companion did not seem inclined to talk I mads myself as comfortable as circumstances would permit. I turned my head toward the window, through which the surrounding country could be seen dimly in the moonlight as we rushed along, put a roll of rugs under my head and resigned myself to a night of discomfort. The next thing it was broad daylight. I awoke with a dull pain in my head and a sense of weariness that my sleep had rather increased than diminished.

'My companion was sitting by the window reading the book I had given her the night before. On perceiving that I was awake she but down her book and remarked that I was evidently a sound sleeper and that she en-vied me. She had passed a wretched night and was glad that we should seen be in Nics. I thought of Edith, whom I should now see so soon, and then of the surprise I had in store for her.
"I hoped that the necklace would please her, and then, for the first time, it occurred to me that perhaps it would have been bet-ter if I had consulted some woman of taste before buying it. A brilliant idea struck me—my companion was just the one to decide.

I would ask her opinion. It was not too late to change the neckiace for something clse if she thought it not suitable. I was sure she would tell me candidly just what she thought.

"Unbuttoning my coat I drew the package from my pocket and laid it on my lap. Rosmoving the wrappings I opened the little blue case. For a moment I could not believe my eyes-it was empty!

my eyes—it was empty!

"I turned quickly to my companion. She was leaning forward motionless, breath-less, her face pale and in her eyes a look that I shall never forget. One hand was pressed convulsively over her heart. She had removed her gloves worn the night before, and on one finger blazed a diamond—the one I had seen the previous day at the jeweler's. In an instant I saw it all, I sprang forward and grasped her wrist—roughly, I am afraid.

roughly, I am afraid.
" Give me back the necklace, you thief, I cried. 'I know you. You stood by my side yesterday in the jeweler's shop on the Avenue de l'Opera. I remember that ring and your voice. You heard me say that I was going to Nice by this train. The liquor you gave me was drugged and you thought to escape before your theft was discovered. It was a very clever scheme, but it has failed. Give me the necklace or I shall turn you over to the police.' "I stretched out my hand, thinking that, seeing the folly of further concealment and the uselessness of denial, she would return the stolen property. I was wrong. She drew herself up haughtily and looked me full in the face. When she spoke it was in full in the face. When she spoke it was in a voice that showed no traces of the sweetness which had at first attracted me.

"You have brought a serious charge against me," she said, 'and one of which I am innocent. I am alone, and a woman'—this with a memeratary tremor in her voice that somehow made me ashamed of the way I had spoken to her. 'If, as you say, you have lest a necklace, your only reason for accusing me of having stelen it is that we have been the only occupants of this compartment. The instant you opened the box and found it empty I saw the awful position that I was placed in. Fortunately, how-that I was placed in. Fortunately, now-ever, I can prove my innocence.

"Perhaps you may hesitate before again attempting to blackmail an unprotected, woman. As soon as we arrive at Nice I shall insist on going at once to the police station, where a thorough search of my bag-gage and person shall be made. I shall then ask you to prove that you ever had a necklace." This remark was accompanied necklace. This remark was accompanied by a smile that was not pleasant to see. 'Until we reach Nice you will not address me again.'

"She leaned back in her seat and turns than saw that she was crying "I began to feel uncomfortable. What it, after all, I had been too ready to jump at conclusions and had been mistaken. Was it not possible that the box might have been empty when I received it from the jeweiers? I had not seen the necklace after it was left to be repaired, as the box was wrapped up when I called for it. My companion had in. sisted upon an investigation that might prove her innocence—an investigation that a guilty woman would never have proposed. Besides this, she had expressed a doubt as to the existence of the necklace and had accused me of attempt at blackmail. The more I thought of it the more unpleasant my position became.

"Suddenly my eyes fell on something bright lying on the floor of the carriage. 1 stooped and picked it up. It proved to be the little heart-shaped padlock I had noticed the night before on the poodle's collar. Like a flash a thought came to me; here might be the solution of the problem; at any rate I would put it to the test. No time must be lost, as we were just entering the station and in a moment more the guard would open the carriage door. 'Reaching across the seat with a quick motion I drew the sleeping animal to my side. The woman sprang forward to prevent me, but she was too late. I had already torn the collar from the dog's neck and was helding it to the light that entered dimly through the window from the station.

"I breathed a sigh of relief; the inside of the collar contained a hollow groove, and in this groove, securely fastened, lay the miss-ing necklace. I turned triumphantly to my companion. The door was open; she was

"That morning as I entered Edith's parlor the little poolle trotted contentedly by my side, and instead of the collar he wore the necklace. As for the woman, I never saw her again."

Iced Drinks and the Teeth.

While that awful drill went whiz-z-z, and the boss of the situation sardonically looked down, the speechless patient with a rubber dam under his teeth lis-tened, between jumps, to the philosophical rumblings of the ivory carver, and along about midnight recalled this much: "Do you know that fillings come
