Where Are the Band Concerts?

The question is frequently asked lately, what has become of the series of band concerts that was commenced early in the summer in Fairmount park? The first of the series was the only one that ever materialized. It attracted big crowds to the park and its success amply justified the park commissioners and the motor company in the expenditure they underwent. For some reason or other the scheme to have band concerts a regular feature of Sunday afternoon at the park died a-borning, and those who seek recreation have had to look elsewhere. There are plenty of musicians in the city who can be gotten together, and it is to be hoped that another concert will be forthcoming before long.

The Survivor Still Lives and Now Occupies the Only One of the Original Cabins

Not Destroyed - The Tale from Her Own Lips.

SPIRIT LAKE, Ia., July 31 .- (Correspondence of The Bee.)-On a narrow point of land extending out over the south side of the West Okoboji and within a stone's throw of the beach of that beautiful body of water stands a log cabin. It is one story high, it has two windows and a door, and it is old and weather beaten. A few rods away to the southeast is a heap of rocks. On the spot now marked by these stones will soon be erected, by the state of Iowa, a handsome granite monument. Connected with this crude little cabin and with this heap of rocks is a story pregnant and pathos and with horror.

The cabin stands on one of the most de lightfully charming and picturesque spots in all this romantic region. It was built way back in the fall of 1856 by a man named Gardner, who came to lowa with an ox team and a wagon, at a time when this section of country was a wilderness, to make a home for himself and family. He was a stout-hearted, cheery man, buoyant of spirits and full of hope. His was the first cabin built in Dickinson county, and he took a degree of pride in it. He was accompanied hither by his son-in-law, and they worked night and day to prepare a home for the reception of those of the family who were to follow. About this same time several other cottages were put up about the lakes. In the early days of the March following the peaceful little band of pioneers were startled by stories which reached them of depredations being committed on the Little Sloux by a lot of roving Indians. Few recautions, however, were taken against an attack, and consequently when the redskins came upon the settlement they found little to resist the execution of their damnable purpose. The story of that blood-curdling butchery is now a part of history. The Gardner cabin was the first one assaulted; the rime committed therein was horrible in the extreme. All therinmates of that happy home were ruthlessly slain, except the youngest daughter Abble, then 14 years old. She was taken caplive and not for four She months did she regults her liberty. That awful massacre resulted in the death of thirty-six men, women and children. All of the cabins were burned to the ground except that of the Gardners; it was spared and is still standing; a stient reminder of that bloody affair, do dd The writer found his way to the historic cabin on the occasion of a recent visit to Okoboji and talked with the interesting woman who lives there. For many years Mrs. Sharp could not bear to mention the massacre in which all in the world whom she held dear were slain in cold blood before her eyes, but time has softened her grief and now she can talk about it without mani-festing any emotion. Soon after her release from captivity she was wedded to Mr. Sharp. For some time thereafter she resided in Hampton, Ia., but later moved to St. Paul, where she remained till she came back to her childhood home. In a pretty little cottage not far away from the historic cabin in which she makes her home live her son and his interesting family. The wails of the old cabin are decorated with paintings of the massacre and of scenes incident to Mrs. Sharp's captivity. The heap of boulders described above mark scenes of that memorable day is still alive. She now signs herself Mrs. Abble Gardner Sharp. Mrs. Sharp is a pleasant-faced woman, with rather sharp eyes, a luxurious head of hair, a broad forehead, and a nose, mouth and chin indicative of firmness and character. About ten years ago Mrs. Sharj wrote and had published a book descriptive About ten years ago Mrs. Sharp of the massacre and recounting in detail the neidents of her four months' captivity. had considerable of a sale and netted its au thor a snug sum of money. After an absence of more than thirty years Mrs. Sharp has returned here and purchased the little old cabin in which she witnessed the sickening scenes of that blustery March day, and she now makes it her home. She also purchased the grounds surrounding the cabin, and the place has been transformed into a museum of Indian relics.

At the last session of the legislature an At the last session of the legislated an appropriation of $5,000 was made for the purpose of gathering together the remains of the victims of the massacre and the erect-ing over them of a monument.

The summer season is now open here, and the hotels are filled to overflowing with guests, while around the lakes are numerguests, while around the larges and mater-ous tents, each sheltering as many people as it can comfortably hold. Nearly every-body goes to see Mrs. Sharp and to hear form her own lips the thrilling story of the massacre.

"I now see all that occurred on that fateful day as clearly as if it were but yester she said to the writer. "The agony o day.' soul I suffered during the execution of those barbarous deeds and in the four months of my captivity cannot be expressed in words. I see them now-the Indians-bedecked with their paint and feathers and brandishing their death dealing tomahawks as they swooped down upon us. We had been warned of their coming, but so many rumors had been set affoat concerning Indian depredations that we did not feel any particular alarm till we saw them coming and heard their awful yell. Some of the men in the settlement were prepared to resist their terrible onslaught, but they were so greatly outnumbered that they could make but feeble fight. For many years the soul-sick-ening scenes of that day would rise before me in my sleep, and I was a nervous wreck. But as time wore on 1 regained my composure, and my nervousness passed away.

LEIGH LESLIE. AFTER VALUABLE LAND.

Efforts Being Made to Cancel Indian Attachments on South Dakota. CHAMBERLAIN, S. D., Aug. 5 .- (Special to The Bee.)-Action has been commenced before the United States land office in this city for the cancellation of the allotments taken by two Sioux Indians, Parted Hair and Roan Dog, under the provisions of the bill opening the Sioux reservation to settlement. The case is an interesting one. The land is on White river, in the ceded Sious lands, and nearly 1,500 acres are included in the two allotments. A great deal of the land is heavily timbered and for this and other reasons is very valuable. A number of white nen have presented filings at the local land office for some of the land embraced in the two allotments, but in pursuance of law the applications were invariably rejected as being conflict with the rights of the two In dians. The parties who have taken the preliminary steps toward having the allotments canceled claim that the Indians have never lived on the land or established residence thereon in accordance with the provisions of the Sloux bill. Roan Dog died about a year the richest kind of a gold mine if there was a petrified turtle within a 100 miles. ago, and Parted Hair is at present a soldier expects to return home about the last of Sep n the army of the United States. When the Indian allotments are canceled, as they probably will be in the course of time, a struggle for possession of the land will take ace between the white settlers who have their eyes upon it.
