CUSTER'S DISCOVERY OF GOLD

It Led to the Inva ion of the Black Hills Waile Still an Indian Reservation.

GOLD SEEKERS A LITTLE "TGO PREVIOUS"

Overtaken by Troops They Are Summarily Ejected and More Than Fifty Loaded Wagons Were Confiseated and Burned.

There are still scattered throughout South Dakota a number of the men who participated in the rush to the Black Hills immeliately after and during the year following the discovery of gold in that section by General Custer, who commanded the government expedition that visited the Hills in the summer of 1874. As the Black Hills were not ceded by the Indians until 1876, all who entered that gold-saturated paradise previous to that time took their lives in their hands and ran the constant risk of being waylaid and killed by Indians, or captured by the troops of Uncle Sam and escorted out of the country, after having all their effects confiscated by the federal authorities. Among the men who entered the Black Hills in 1875 was John Elshire, now a restdent of Chamberlain, S. D. Himself and four companions made the start from the present location of Fort Pierre in April of that year. The land now embraced in the town sits was at that time included in a large ranch owned by a man named John Fraser. One of the party of gold hunters was a man named Swaranger, and as he claimed to be an old California miner, the other members of the party depended upon him to find the gold after they reached the distant Eldorado. Another of the party, William Traynor, was a civil engineer. The other two were Prenchmen, whose natural love of adventure, and the possibility of gain, induced them to join the little cavalcade.

They crossed to the west side of the Missouri river in the steamer Key West, a boat famous in the history of early days on the upper Missouri. The supplies for the party were transported in a wagon, which was drawn by two horses. The ranchman, John Fraser, was engaged to guide them across the dangerous and practically un-known country, 150 miles in width, which separated them from their destination. For about sixty miles the party followed Bad river, and from there drifted over to the Bad Lands, where the men went into camp on the north branch of the White river and remained a couple of days. In the Bad Lands it was necessary more than once to take the wagon apart and carry it down the precipices. While in the Bad Lands Fraser, the guide, was discharged on ac-count of his inability to guide the party

Between the forks of the Cheyenne river the men frequently saw large herds of buf-falo. Many bones were found scattered about over the prairie, which were ascertained to be those of Indians, who had proba-bly been killed in battle with other savage tribes and allowed to lie where they had fallen. Elshire secured a perfect Indian skeleton, but afterwards had the misfortune The first view of the Black Hills was obtained soon after crossing the Chevonne river, thirteen days having been consumed in making the trip from the Missouri river to the foot hills. A remarkable feature of the journey was the fact that dur ing the entire thirteen days not a single Indian was seen, although the country was fairly teeming with the red men.

After the first view of the Hills the party headed straight for them. Knowing that General Custer had entered the Hills the year previous, Elshire and his comrades de cided to strike if possible the route traveled by Custer and his expedition, and enter the hills by the same route, as it would save them days of fruitless scrambling among the well-nigh impassable canyons and creeks. whose solitude so far as known had not yet been disturbed by the presence of the pale-After traveling northward for two days along the foot hills the party succeeded in striking the Custer trail, which entered the Black Hills from the north.

ter expedition and made a road, which at the time of the visit of Eishire and his companions was still plainly to be seen, being as well beaten as any old established eastern highway. Elshire's party followed the Custer trail nearly to the southern extremity of the Black Hills, and finally concluded to halt near Harney's Peak. Below this moun-tain on French creek two Sioux City men. Gordon and Whitcher, had located the fall previous with a party of gold hunters, and for their protection had constructed a huge stockade which was designed as a safeguard against assaults by Indians. The stockade proper was constructed of logs with the ends buried in the ground, rendering it as impregnable as a fortress. Inside this enclosure eight houses were built, pine logs furnishing the building material. They made comfortable dwellings, being provided with fire places and other conveniences. The stockade did not have block houses on the corners from which sentries could overlook the surrounding country, but holes had been cut all around the stockade, through which rifles could be fired in all directions in the event of an Indian attack.

About two weeks prior to the arrival in that region of Elshire and his companions United States troops from Camp Sheridan. Neb., raided the stockade to the consterna-tion of its inmates. Whitcher had left early that spring for Sioux City after supplies, and had not yet returned, but Gordon and the balance of his party were made prisoners and taken to Camp Sheridan. On Whitcher's return from Sioux City with fifty or sixty wagonloads of supplies, the caravan was stopped near Camp Sheridan when about to head northward, and Captain Walker, who was in command of the troops, ordered the supply train to go no further. While the vigilance of the troops was temporarily relaxed Whitcher and his men at-tempted to escape with all the wagons. In preparation for an attack by the troops, the wagons were drawn up in a circle on the prairie, the men at first undoubtedly intending to make a desperate resistance to any attempt on the part of the military authorities to recapture them. But when the troops arrived on the ground the next morning and ordered them to throw up their hands and submit to the authority of the United States, the men considered that dis-cretion was the better part of valor and complied with as good grace as the circum-stances would permit. The men were then placed under arrest and the wagons with all their contents were burned. The men were held as prisoners for a time, when they were released and many of them returned to Sioux City. When last heard of Whitcher lived in the Belle Fourche region of the Black Hills, where he had a stock ranch. Elshire's party thought they were very forturate when they arrived at the deserted stockade and found that everything belonging to its former occupants, such as picks, gold pans, shovels, cooking utensils etc., had been left behind. Without hesita tion they took possession of the stockade and prepared to make themselves comfortable, but within a few days ran out of provisions. A search through the buildnature, but finding a barrel of salt in one of the buildings the men managed, by killing a deer now and then, to keep from starving. Pinally becoming tired of subsisting on nothing but venison flavored with salt, Swaranger, the old California miner, volun eered to take Elshire's horse and go to Sidney, Neb., after supplies. In the meantime the men had been dill gently prospecting for gold in the surround-ng country with very good success, and inally engaged in placer mining along Ca-amity bar, on French creek, in the vicinity of the stockade. It was at this place that General Custer's party had firsts discovered gold while on the expedition the year pre-vious. Elshire states that he saw the cavity, vious. Elistife states that he saw the cavity, atout seven or eight feet deep, from which Custer's party took their first gold. Prof. Jenny, at present dean of the State School of Mines at Spearfish, was with General Custer, and he is generally credited with having been the first to find gold.

Crook arrived on the ground from Fort Laramic, and immediately apon his arrival orders were given the miners to leave the country without delay. So great had been the influx of gold seekers during the past few weeks that by this time the number of miners had increased to fully 1,500, the men faving com- from all sections of the union and entered the Hills by the various routes. When their operations were so summarily checked by the troops the principal minute was being done on French creek, although considerable prospecting was under way on Spring, Castle and Box Elder creeks, which probably seven or eight miles distant from each other.
All but nine of the 1.500 men left the 'diggings' when ordered to do so. These left there to represent the interests of the miners until the negotiations by the govern-ment for the purchase of the Black Hills ors that he had no orders regarding their removal, but that he expected such orders in a few days. Some time in June General from the Sioux had been brought to a ang-cessful issue. The small army of miners then scattered in all directions. turned to Fort Hale, north of Chamberlain, on the Missouri river, but now abandoned, which at that time was strongly garrisoned by troops under Captain Dureusey. During Elshire's sojourn in the Black Hills he witnessed one difficulty with the Sioux. One day while some of the miners were passing through a guich on Box Elder creek a number of Indians suddenly appeared on top of the adjacent hills. Hefore the miners underatood their purpose the Sioux fired a volley of about twenty shots, killing one man.

The Good Old Ruck Horse Knew He Ought

Not Move.

An incident which portrayed the wonderful instinct of a horse occurred on Clinton street, says the Cincinnati Enquirer. The equine in question is the property of Johnny Ryan, the well known backman. The animal is decidedly the best known of all the horses that nightly stand on Vine street for duty, and when addressed as "he pricks up his ears instantly. 'Jerry' He is a large bay horse, and is very fond of sweetmeats. Children often stop at Fourth and Vine streets, where Jerry is in the habit of standing, and feed him candy and bonbons. He is friendly with everybody, but especially fond of children. Aside from his extreme good nature, Jerry is also a thorough business animal. He knows his master's voice, and never 'soldiers' when out on a trip. As soon as Jerry hears his master climb up to his seat he starts out on his journey without waiting to be hit with the whip or 'clucked" at.

Last evening Hackman Ryan took a passenger, whom he know well, to his home on Clinton street. Johnny was invited into the house to have a cigar and accepted the inviation. He remained in the house for quite i time and then returned to his back. He limbed up to his seat, but Jerry did not move, as was his custom. The horse stood stock still and his gaze was fixed downward. The owner of the horse thought something he animal to see what was the cause of tha delay. Imagine his astonishment when he saw a little babe with both arms clasped around one of Jerry's ferelegs. n its childish glee, was smiling at Jerry and the brute seemed to understand the situation exactly. The child patted Jerry's ponderous hoofs and the animal seemed rather amused at the antica of the little one.

Jerry knew that one move of his heavy hoofs meant certain death to the little one, and he did not budge until his master got down from his seat and picked up the babe. The hackman then allowed the baby to play with Jerry's mane until its arms were tired out. By that time the mother of the babe had discovered that her precious one had crawled from the front yard to the street. By that time the mother of the babe The little one had got to the gutter unnotic d by all save Jerry. When the mother of the child was told that the big horse had refused to move from his tracks lest he would injure her little one she went out to Jerry and im-

MAKING POSTAGE STAMPS. Uncle Sam Going Into the Business on His

On the 1st of July the government of the United States began printing its own postage stamps at the bureau of engraving and

There will be new designs adopted soon, but for the present the old ones will be used for the common stamp—the 2-cent stamp with the head of Washington printed in carmine ink, and the 1-cent, which bears the head of Franklin, and is printed in ultramarine blue. In order to distinguish those printed by the government a little ornament will be placed in the blank space in the upper corners.

This is a fact of interest to collectors. This is a fact of interest to collectors, there is quite a quantity of the old stamps on hand, and the new ones will not be issued until they are needed, although it is necessary to keep a large stock in the distributing offices, as about 7,000,000 2-cent stamps are used daily, and about 3,500,000 of 1-cent denomination.

Postage stamps are printed by engrayed

Postage stamps are printed by engraved cylinders in shiets of 400. A die is first eut in a block of steel about three inches square, like an intaglio.

The steel is then hardened by what is known as the decarbonizing process—that is, all the carbon is burned out of the metal by subjecting it to intense heat, and then the impression is transferred to a roll or evidence of set, then like a carbon the impression is transferred to a roll of cylinder of soft steel, like a cameo.

From this the working plates or rolls are mads, which are afterward hardened by the same process. This method was invented by a Vermont Yankee named Perkins, about half a century ago. He took the invention to London and tried to sell it to the British government, but the officials over there were exposed to innovations, as usual, and were opposed to innovations, as usual, and Mr. Perkins brought it back home and sold the patent to his own government.

The stamp collectors have cornered the $1 stamps of Columbian issue, and uncanceled ones are now worth $10. Captain Sweeney, U. S. A., San Diego, Cal., says: "Shiloh's Catarrh Remedy is the first medicine I have ever found that would do me any good." Price 50c.
