PACIFIC LINES AGREE TO AN ADVANCE

Only North Cacific Coast Terminals Affected by the Union Pacific's Determination to Increase Earnings-Doings Among the failroads.

For two years or more rates to North Pacific coast points have been gradually going down, to the everlasting disgust of the Union Pacific and an occasional expression of regret from the Northern Pacific and Great Northern. A new condition of affairs will, however, obtain September 17, when the class rates to the North Pacific coast day. points will be advanced. The Union Pacific, having made up its mind that there could be an advance made over San Francisco rates, Traffic Manager Munroe decided to attempt an increase, although at first conditions seemed such as to defeat his purpose from the very beginning. But Mr. Munroe kept pegging away on the idea of an advance until the Northern Pacific and Great Northern finally agreed to the lining up of the new rates. Now all the transcontinental lines have come into the fold and the rates will become operative Monday, September 17. The rate to San Francisco on class freight remains the same, $2.40 per hundred, but the rate to become Wolf and the rate to Spokane, Walla Walla and other North Pacific coast terminals will, on the day above mentioned, be increased.

The rates from Chicago to the terminals on the North Pacific coast will be as follows:

Her Love Proved Her Death.

BETHLEHEM, Ia., Sept. 2 .- (Special to The Bee.)-The death of Miss Minnie Powell yesterday morning ended a life that had been blighted by the false love of a professional evangelist. About a year ago a traveling preacher named Folden came to this little place and started the work of saving sin-ners. He was very successful, and soon had the confidence of all. He made his home while here with Alexander Powell, a prospercus farmer. As a result Minnie Powell, the farmer's 18-year-old daughter, gave birth to a child at the home of her sister-in-law about three weeks ago, and commenced legal proceedings against Folden had been married since accomplishing Miss Powell's ruin. A deputy sheriff went down to Waubunsie, where Folden lives, and levied on the preacher's property, to be used in providing support for his illegiti-mate child. Much feeling exists in the community against Folden.

But, somehow was by no means unnatural. But, somehow or other, the world refuses to entertain the idea of more than one or two herces of an great crisis, and, little by little, the leader on the union side faded cut of sight, unt at present but two figures, those of Lincol and Grant, remain with any degree of pro-insuce. Grant will always stand before t world as the Hero of Appomattox; Meade McClellan, Burnside, Halleck and a dozen more who might be mentioned are gradually fading away. The leading figure of the war that of Lincoln, instead of diminishing, h daily growing, and today has assumed di mensions greater than would have been be lieved possible by even these men of his own time who recognized his immonse influence n that momentous struggle. On the con Tederate side the popular hero at the time and the one whose reputation promised the longest life, was Davis, the president of the confederacy. There seemed every reason that, in all time, he should be considered the leading representative of the south, but fate de-creed otherwise, and the great hero of the struggle on that side is the military leader, Robert E. Lee. The chances-speaking from bservation and probability-seemed to be all

n favor of Davis, but the ex-president of the ex-confederacy was scarcely laid away in his grave before his fame began to dwindle, until now "none so poor as to do him reverence;" while Lee, on the other hand, stands forth the noblest figure in southern history. Further back in our history the principle holds just as good as in our own time, or during the days of the war. Webster, Clay and Calhoun seemed to have equal chances to win as much of immortality as can be conferred by the fact that their names are in every one's mouth, yet fortune has dealt most unequally with these three. During their lifetime Clay and Calhoun were quite as prominent, if not more so, than Webster, yet he reputation of the latter has grown stupendous proportions, while that of the other two has proportionally diminished Ask any ten men on the street about Clay or Calhoun and the chances are that a coniderable percentage of the number will not have heard of either, but Wobster's name is known to everybody, if only from the fact that one or two fragments from his speeches have been incorporated into the "readers," and so are familiar to every schoolboy. Go back still further and a similar state of things is found in the earliest history of our country, for the higher criticism of historical mattera is even now dealing unkindly with the memory of Washington and exalting the reputations of one or two others, who, in his time, were not considered worthy to un loose the latchet of his shoes. The same thing is true of our presidents. The list is familiar to every man of ordinary information, yet of the whole number there are but three or four who are remembered save as abstractions. They are names and nothing more. They stand in a crowd and one may readily be mistaken for another. During their lifetime they semed to have equal chances for an increment of reputation, but n only a very limited number of cases was

A Quaint Monument and the Record I Bears.

It is twelve years since Ralph Waldo Emerson was laid to rest in the cemetery of Sleepy Hollow at Concord, and during all that time his grave has been unmarked by any name or inscription which would indicate to strangers that the distinguished Con-cord philosopher slept benesth. A nameless block of pink and white quartz of no geo-metric shape, only a great boulder of na-ture's own arrangement of crystals, steed near the head of a grave which was pointed out to strangers as that of Emerson. There seemed no significance in the presence such a block of mineral, but rather a gaudy irrelevancy, the showy character of the pyramid being strangely inconsistent with the dark pines which cast their solemn shadows about the great amphitheater of death. death. Thoughtless strangers chipped relies from the pink crystal and often those who were looking with longing interest for the grave of the philosopher only guessed from the family name of Emerson on other graves in the vicinity that this was indeed his resting place. But within a few days a name-plate has been affixed to the rose-quartz monu-ment and it bears this record, setting the question of who sleeps there beyond a doubt: RALPH WALDO EMERSON.

How the Mink Steals Fish and Game from

But there is a more serious objection yet to making the proposed contract for five years. The Council Bluffs Gas and Electric Light company was voted the franchize un-der which it has been operated in Ocidor, 1889. This the city council did. It was never confirmed by the prople at any elec-tion, but on the 18th day of the did. Sportsmen Down East. Probably the most cunning of all animals is the mink. Its propensity for stealing is marvelous, and the methods of stealing and hiding the proceeds of its robberles are unique in the history of the lower species. tion; but on the 12th day of April, 1888, a statute went into effect forbidding from that We do not refer here to the depredations of the mink among poultry, for they resort to day the grant of any franchise by any municipality of Iowa unless same was aphenneries only when the waters are frozen nemeries only when the waters are frozen or a supply of fish is unobtainable, says the Lewiston Jeurnal. Two gentlemen were fishing on one of the rivers of Maine. The fish were quite plenty, and as soon as at an election, general or special, at which the franchise was submitted to the voters for confirmation or rejection, and in itigation arising out of an attempt by a city to grant a franchise to an electric light company without submission to popular one was caught it was thrown behind on the grass. After some time one of the gentle-men thought he would take a rest and at te, our supreme court held that no franchise the same time examine his capture. But he could not find a single fish. He charged his friend with having played him a trick, had been issued, and because there f no contract for public lighting could be made with such company. Accordingly, in that case, at the suit of a taxpayer, the contract made was but the friend was as much surprised as he. They now determined to watch their next adjudged invalid and the city officials were fish, and their astonishment was unbounded enjoined from making any payments under when they saw a mink run from a hole near by, snatch up a fish and carry it off to it. The reason is clear, without a franchise the electric light company was a trespasser upon the streets and it is preposterous to say the hole, where they afterwards found their entire capture cunningly hidden under some that city officials can tax people to pay a wrongdoer for performance of that which he has no right at all to do. dead leaves. In the same manner the mink steals game which sportsmen shoot. On one occasion a gentlemian shot a wild duck, but before the dogs could get to it a mink had stolen it carried it off to a hole in the frozen snow which one mink had prepared while the other was watching for the opportunity to steal the sportsman's game. Notwithstanding this sparticular characteristic the mink is a brave as well as ferocious little fellow, and he is excelled in these qualities only by the ermine. He seems to have a peculiar aver-son for the muskrat, and although the muskrat is generally more than double his size the mink attacks him feirlessly, and always wins the battle, after which he drags his dead enemy to some hiding place, as in the cases , i the fish and wild duck. They are found in almost every state of the uni n, but most frequently in Maine and in the states bordering the great lakes. Mink skins matter to the people for determination, rather than by executing this contract making themselves personally liable to refund to the city treasury the amounts that may be are sold in great numbers by Maine trappers, and are sold for furs under various names.

St. Paul, Wabash and Big Four Suffered the Most from the Strike.

NEW YORK, Sept. 2 .- Enough July railroad statements are at hand to obtain a just idea of the Chicago strike's influence on net earnings. There is a remarkable diversity in the results. The St. Paul, the Big Four and the Wabash have suffered heavily. Each of these three companies shows for July by far the largest net decrease of the year. In each the percentage of operating expenses to may come.

gross earnings breaks this year's record, the percentage for the two roads first mentioned running to 10 per cent above the average.

On the other hand, the net decrease on Burlington and the Pennsylvania is the smallest since the exceptional economies of March, and their operating percentage is well below this year's average. Still more re-markable, the Louisville, the Chesapeake & Ohio and the Erie make actual net gains over 1893. Part of this singular discrepancy is doubtless due to the irregular distribution of World's fair traffic and expenses in July last year. Yet the figures show that the statements referred to diverge similarly from one when compared with those of another. 1892. Allowing for all the difference in capacity for working economies, the fact is plain that the St. Paul, the Wabash and the Big Four suffered out of all proportion to their fellow corporations from the railway insurrection. It would be of peculiar interest to learn the actual results with the Rock Island. But this company follows the worst practice imaginable in its reports of earnings, and absolutely no trustworthy information is obtainable.

POSTHUMOUS REPUTATION

Singular Manner in Which Some Have Grown and Others Waned.

The growth of posthumous reputation is one of the curiosities of history. At first glance there seems no good reason why one of two reputations equally brilliant during the lifetime of their possessors should die any quicker than the other; but it is often seen that one man, in every way quite as prominent as his fellow in the same line, is remembered, while the other is completely forgotten. A striking illustration of this fact says the Globe-Democrat, may perhaps be observed in the case of Blaine and Conkling The former during his life was by far the more prominent of the two. A man of winning presence, of great personal attractive ness, who made his way among men as he chose, who was everywhere welcome and by every one well thought of -a man who held various high offices in the gift of his govern ment and more than once was a candidate for the highest position in the land; the other i man of marked political abilities, an orator of great power, a scholar of the first rank, yet reserved in his manner, haughty to a fault, and who never attained higher place than the honorable position of senator from New York, and yet of these two Conkling seems at present likely to be remembered longer than Blaine. His posthumous repu'a tion is waxing, that of Blaine is waning The contrary might have been expected. Nine people out of ten, had they been asked the question which would live the longer in history, after both had been laid beneath the sod, would have answered. Blaine, as a mat-ter of course. But the sarcasm of fate seems disposed to disappoint the poular expectation That man must be very prominent indeed who is talked about six months after he is dead. but at present Conkling is more a subject of public discourse than his great rival from Maine

A similar fate has attended many of the great figures of the civil war. While the con flict was actually going on there were many men who seemed to catch the public eye t such an extent as to eclipse most of their contemporaries, and the supposition that some of these reputations at least would pre-emi
