Imprisonment and Death - The Truth Revealed by Recent Discoveries.

Howaver great the power of legend, his-tory eventually triumphs over it. Truth in history is like a chip floating in the current of a stream; at times the waves sweep over and submerge it, but it rises again to the surface. The next number of the Paris Revue Historique, the leading French magazine of history, will contain an article which The of nearby, of a contain an article watch identity of that famous prisoner of the Bas-tile known as "The Man with the Iron Mask." This unravels at last one of the apparently hopeless mysteries of history.

him to fill a library. The first account of his imprisonment was printed at Amster-dam in 1745, and was in the form of an al-legory, the scene of which was laid in Persia. In 1751 the great Voltaire, who had the best nose for interesting news of any man in the eighteenth century, revived the tale in his "Age of Louis XIV," published in Berlin in 1751. He added much inter-esting information which he obtained at first hand, for during his life he was in-timately acquainted with most of the per-sonages of this rumantic drama. But Voltaire pever allowed the trath to stand in

VOLTAIRE'S STORY. Voltairs mays that the queen, wife of Louis XIII, after giving birth to Louis XIV, was delivered at a subsequent hour of a second son whose birth the king resolved to couceal, to avoid a dispute about a succession to the throne, it being the opinion of certain legal authorities that the first born of twins has a doubtful claim to any inheritance de-pending upon birth. With this view the child was confided to a nurse, and afterward to a governor, who took him to his seat in Bur-gundy, where, growing to manhood, the child discovered the secret of his birth, and was forthwith placed in confinement, with a mask to conceal his features, which were the exact counterpart fo his brother, the king's. Un-fortunately for the truth of the tale, Voltaire had no proofs to back it up. Napoleon I was inclined to believe Voltaire's story, and had a Dyonca's exactitude is fully borne out by an extract from the register of burials for the parish of St. Paul, accredited to the vicar, under his hand, February 9, 1790. This entry is as follows: "In the year 1703, the 19th of November, died at the Bastile, Marchiall, aged 45, or thereabouts. The body was interred in the burial ground of St. Paul on the 20th of said month in the presence of M. Rosarges, major of the Bastile, and of M. Reih, sergeant of the Bastile, who have affixed their signatures." Marchiali was an assumed name given to baffle inquiry, as was also the alleged age cf the dead man.

After his death the utmost care was taken to destroy every vestige of his existence. Everything that he had been in the habit of using, his clothes, bedding, etc., was burnt, The walls of his room were scraped and replastered, the window panes were changed, and, according to some authorities, the body itself was consumed with quicklime.
