CHRISTMAS SUNDAY IN OMAHA CHURCHES

Beautiful Decorations, Elaborate Musical Services and the Homage of Joyful Hearts Characterize the Observance of the Festival of the Nativity.

Quite all the churches in Omaha had Christmas color yesterday, and in many of them the decorations in honor of the festival them the decorations in honor of the festival chilling with disappointment; that can shine of the nativity were elaborate and beautiful. in with hope and beauty on the days that Special musical services were general, and are overcast with bereavement and somber the anthems and carols were so full of joy with open graves. We have not a spring the anthems and carols were so full of joy with and so full of heart that one might almost imagine that he was listening to the chorus of angels whose celestial symphony caught you. the ears and thrilled the souls of the shep-herds on the hills of Judea on the first Christ-against the day of greatest need. mas morning.

The sermons preached not Jesus dead, but Jesus born. The shadow of the cross was not seen, but Christendom with one accord the story of the sorrows and sufferings of joined the cavalcade of the wise men and went to look into the manger cradle at Bethlehem. At the Kountze Memorial Lutheran church Rev. A. J. Turkle spoke in part as follows:

The divine birth in Bethlehem will never cease to be a subject of wonder and joy to mankind. It is more worthy to be commem-orated by song and sacred festivity than the greatest victory ever achieved in war, or the grandest triumph ever recorded in the history of nations. The blaze of light that shene 'round the shepherds of the Judean hillsides shall brighten with the ages of the future the grandest triumph ever recorded in the history of nations. The blaze of light that shene 'round the shepherds of the Judean hillsides cease to be a subject of wonder and joy to shall brighten with the ages of the future, until it shines in all the dark places of the world. The spirit of Christmas will spread until it encompasses the whole earth. It is busy bodies; no crushing monopolies; none growing rich by pauperizing their brethren; growing rich by pauperizing their brethren; all bearing each other's burdens, helping each other in their weakness, doing unto others as they would be done by, looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of their faith and trusting Him in every experience. The removes to all this will be perhaps: the best and brightest of the year. No other day comes to us laden with a lesson so well worth learning. No other shines with a hope so uplifting. No other means as much that makes life worth living. No other imparts such a dignity to human destiny. In this age of ours, when on all sides there is haste to get riches, haste to get honor, haste to elevate self, it is of infinite value that a day should be set apart and hailed as the crown of the year, whose central teaching is that giving is more blessed than getting. The wheels of business and human activity move to the cry, "Look out for number one." But on cry, "Look out for number one. But on Christmas day the golden rule asserts itself, and amid its many cheery voices rings an undertone uttering the celestial paradox: "He all humanity. that loses his life shall find it.

' That there is a tendency to secularize Christmas in the mode of its observance, is no doubt plain to all. On the other hand, there is cause no less evident for rejoicing in the fact that, as a Christian festival, a home day and a church day, the birthday of our blessed Lord is widely observed. It is true, too, that the very secularizing tendencies have had the effect of bringing more and more into prominence the proper celeand more into prominence the proper cele-bration of this day of days. And there is no reason to believe that the religious fervor will ever be eliminated from this sacred festival. More churches than ever before commemorate the sacred event. There was a time when austere and bigoted puritans set their faces sternly against Christmas. But these prejudices have been gradually But these prejudices have been by year is overcome, and the festival year by year is more generally celebrated in churches of all denominations. Christmas sermons are were likened to the waterpots of stone as they are made the vessels by which the peo-ple receive the divine blessings of God. The water which they first bore was weak, but heard in Congregational pulpits; Christmas carols are sung in Methodist churches Christmas services are followed in Preschurches; byterian Sunday schools and the day is not far distant, we apprehend, in which wor-shiping Christendom will observe Christmas with special and appropriate services. Certainly no other is so worthy of this world-wide homage. The good and great have lived in every generation. But He who was born at Bethlehem is the noblest fruit of the great tree of humanity. Mankind has produced many men distinguished in various departments of activity or knowl-

Every other hero has something in him that curtails our regard and in a manner diminishes our re-spect. Sin, selfishness or ambition prevent even the noblest of men from becoming perfect heroes and helpers of their fellows. There has been but One who has been able to stand before his enemies, and in the face of history, challenge the world with the words: "Who is it that convinceth me of sin?" Modern research has examined the most minute details of His life and deeds and words, and before its keen bar He can still stand and repcat His challenge. Even the all-seeing eye of God detects no flaw or spot in Him, but selemnly declares that with Him the Father is well pleased. There-fore, He is the One through whom alone mankind can attain its highest ideal, that of being pleasing in the sight of God. He does not belong to any single people, but to all mankind While He was born a Jew, yet we never think of him as such. We do not think of him as a Scotchman or German or American or as of any particular nationality. Americans make Washington their hero; France, Napoleon; England, Welllogion, but no nation can make Christ its here to the exclusion of the rest. He be-longs to humanity. He is the Savior of all men. you" a Savior is born this day. You, who in poor and humble circumstances. You, who have trials and temptations; you, who are in the shackles of sin; you, who labor and are heavy laden, to all come the tidings of great joy. Although the One born in Bethlehem has come for the whole world, although His work includes heaven and earth, yet He has a heart for the innermost ongings of our souls; for each individual He is a Savior.

When Christ was born on that first Christmas morning He began to live a real human life. It was God manifest in the flesh. "God sent His only begotten Son into the world." But it was not the divine masquerading in sham humanity; He was not making believe to live the life of a man. It was a real incarnation. He did not come was a real incarnation. He did not come to earth each day and bring His lunch and go back at night. True, there is a deep mystery clustering around the incarnation. But there is mystery about the color of a rose. Light fills space. It wraps systems and constellations in splendor. It is a luminous ccean in which worlds sail. And yet light comes into a little room in your house and searches out a tiny flower, which could not by searching find the light, and makes it more beautiful than anything man ever made. The mystery in one case is as great as in the other. When you tell me how the light which palpita'es from the sun paints the color of that single rose, I will tell you how God, who is every where, comes into one man and so truly lives in him that it is right to say that when we see him we see God. With all its myž-tery the incarnation is a blessed gift. What is it that makes the Lord Jesus dear to us today? What is it that makes us never tired of hearing that old story of waiting shepherds, and kneeling wise men of the

It teaches us that the humblest birth may lead out into the noblest life. It gives encouragement to all that have been poorly started.
