DES MOINES, Ia., Oct. 11, 1894.—L. E. Bridenstein, esq., Council Bluffs., Ia.: Dear Sir—Your favor of the 6th, addressed to Mr. Barnhill, has been handed to me by Mr. Crawford, with instructions to reply. I have been very busy with other matters, and have been unable to take the matter up before this time. Replying to the same, however, will say that for various reasons a rather unexpected change was made at the directors meeting held a short time ago. Among them the resignation of Mr. Barnhill as secretary. This matter was brought about voluntarily by him. Family relations, together with other reasons, prompted him to tender his resignation as he did, which was duly considered and accepted by the directors. Mr. Barnhill gave as his principal reason for doing as he did, that it was not congenial to him to be separated from his family and did not think it advisable to move them from their present location, at least for the present. Other matters of minor detail were also presented, whereupon the action above stated was taken.

DES MOINES, Ia., April 7.—(Special.)— The application which W. S. Richmond filed in the district court last week, asking for a change of venue from Polk county for trial on the charge embezzlement, was to have been argued yesterday. Argument on it has been postponed until next Saturday. The continuance was granted at the request of both parties to the state prosecution. It was asked for and granted on the ground that the attention of Richmond is directed just now to his defense in the federal court to the charge of using the mails to defraud. This indictment was brought by the eral grand jury at Council Bluffs. Judge Woolson set the trial for that place for next Tuesday. The attorneys for Richmond, and also for Crawford and Muffly, have applied to the federal court to grant a change of venue, a transfer of trial, from the federal court at Council Bluffs to the federal court at Des Moines in May. This application will, of course, play an important part in the resistance the state will make in the district court here to a change of venue in the embezzlement cases against Richmond. argued that if Richmond himself sought to have his trial transferred from Council Bluffs. where he is not known, to Des Moines, where he lives, he has not sufficient ground to ask for a transfer of his trials for embezzlement from Des Moines to some other district. Mrs. L. M. Richmond went on the bonds of her son, and of J. L. Crawford, in the federal court, and Colonel Gcd ley of D. s. M. lnes went on Muffiy's bond. The three defendants are all indignant at the manner in which they LETTERS WRITTEN BY RICHMOND. were treated by the federal authorities. Their friends are likewise indignant. In the first place objections are made to their arrest at 11 o'clock at night; objectons are made to the search of Richmond's house for stolen books at 2 o'clock in the morning, and objections are made to taking the men to Council Bluffs in the night,

The faithlessness of Helen, however, was but trifling in its consequences compared with that of Mrs. O'Rourke, another red-haired spouse, whose infid-lity plunged a whole nation into war and brought suffering and grief to untold generations. In 1170 two O'Dermotts, in which the content of the content of Red in the old sagas and folk-lore symbolized blood, war, hatred; and smong the early nations it was associated with divinity and power, both priestly and royal. The tabernacle of the Israelites was covered with skins dyed red; the gods and images of Egypt and Chaldea were painted red, and to this day red is one of the distinguishing olors of the Roman pontiff and his car-

But even among these people red hair was not in favor. The ancient Egyptians, for instance, were violently averse to red hair, and their hatred was literally a burning one, for according to Diodorous they annually went through the grewsome ceremony of burning alive one red-headed maiden in the the color from becoming a common among them. In Spain there is an equally strong preju-dice against red hair. Their proverbs say, as do other authorities, that the hair of the traitor Judas iscariot was red. In all Spanish paintings Judas is distinguished from the other disciples by the flery color of his hair, and among Spanish people the world over red hair is commonly known as 'Judas hair."

"Judas hair."

Among savage tribes, however, red hair is usually held in great esteem. Some of the Alaskan women, for example, smear their hair and faces all over daily with the red juice of the choke cherry, which gives them a bloody corsair aspect. Among the native New Zealanders kura, or red, is the sacred color, and a red-haired woman has a clear road to heaven. All the New Zealand gods and idols are painted red. When a gods and does are painted red. When a person dies his house is so painted, and the scraped bones of dead chiefs are also painted a bright red and then wrapped in a red stained mat and placed in a red box in a red grave over which is erected a red post. Among most savage tribes, as among our own Indians, red signifies war and butchery, although among some, notably the Sionx women, red paint is used only in love and

The Irish, in spite of Mrs. O'Rourke's example, are very fond of red-headed women. Among them locks of the most flery hue have always been considered a lovely attribute beauty. And there is an old Irish ditty which

Heigh for the apple and he for the pear; But give me the pretty girl with the red hair. At one time, it is said, the Irish peasantry managed to have hair of their own choosing by wearing a small "scratch wig," usually made out of red hair, on top of their natural hair. It was a common thing for a peasant to whip off his wig when a distinguished visitor came into his house, dust a chair with it for his guest and then put it on his head again

Red hair is generally regarded as indicat ng a pugnacious or peculiar disposition Anthropologists are inclined to attribute cer-tain distinct natures to the color of hair. They have compiled statistics and observa-tions of the mental characteristics and moral peculiarities of people with the same feature and same colored hair, and claim to be able to reach valuable generalizations from them. They assert that certain well defined moral and social characteristics are peculiar to red headed women; for example, they are found to be capable of greater cruelty than other women, are more deceptive, more designing and more ambitious, they scheme and plot and will more readily sell body and soul to carry out some idea that has for the time possession of them. They are brighter and livelier than most women, but at the same time are usually indolent and domineer-ing, and are often lazy to the point of personal uncleanliness. They are more passion ate and excitable And "red hair" in these days has become wonderfully comprehensive term. Formerly finer distinctions were drawn than are now and certain shades of red were much admire and were carefully distinguished from red proper; but now a woman is a red-head and probably an unwelcome addition, on his first

The one drawback was the difficulty of securing crack riders. In the main the best riders would follow the circuit, which is so arranged as into the circuit practically insures the best riders in the country being present. It is expected that there will be fully 100 entries this year, and there is no reason why the list of records broken last year should not list on high favor that the most favorite shade of it took his name. Natural history goes somewhat awandering about Easter time. The Easter hares who are supposed to lay the egg, and who are supposed to lay the egg, and who are sold in great numbers and made of every conceivable composition, stand in the shops side by side with the downlest of little chickens and ducks, each and all surrounded by every shape and size of candy, glass and china egg. Fortunately, the little people into whose hands they fall, are content to take the pretty things as they are given them and do not bother their mind with these unsolvable problems.
