The American Jewess is the name of an The American Jewess is the name of an illustrated monthly making its first appearance with the April number. It is a woman's journal, affording the advanced Jewess a medium through which to exchange ideas, lefine her wants and develop her literary talent. The contributions in this number are of more than ordinary merit and are highly entertaining. Rosa Sonnenschein Com-

tributor of the special story in the April issue. Francois Coppee is also represented by a haracteristic story in this number and Elizaeth Morgan, Will Lisenbee, C. E. Shute, F. A. Anstey and many other writers of note appear Company, 52-54 Lafayette Place, New York. "The Modern Theory of Representation" is a subject discussed by Lewis R. Harley in the April number of The American Magazine of Civies. Arthur Kitwer, in a paper en-titled "What is Economic Value?" argues for the practicability of an ideal currency. William H. Goodale writes on "Patriotism" and Robert Sherman discusses "What True

Patriotism Demands of the American Citizen." J. H. Long enlightens us on the "Colonial Relation to the Mother Land;" William W. Phelps contributes a paper on "Revision of Constitutions;" Wilbur Aldrich discusses "Reform from the Farmers' Point of View;" Eugene V. Debs furnishes a vigorous protest and exposure relating to "The Cry of 'Anarchist?" "Bimetallism vs. the Single Standard" is treated by L. Finck's biographical sketch of Stavenlagen, also with a portrait, statesmanship Teaching in the Public Schools," travel by paper by Miss Preston on a new field of travel "Beyond the Adriatic," fiction by Mr. Crawford's and Mrs. Harrison's serials, and by three short stories, public questions by various articles in the departments, and engraving is a portrait of a man by Ferdinand Bol, which the engraver has treated in a large manner. The pictures in the number include original work by Kemble, Pyle, Castaigne, George Wharton Edwards, Pape, Ogden and Thuistrup, among the Americans, Napoleon from originals by Gros, Raffet, Desoria, Gerard, Delort, Chartier, Le Comte, Courboin, Detaille, Bellange and Myrbach, among the French. There is also a striking drawing of Mme. Rejane by Krohg, a candinavian artist. The Century Company Young children and old children will find articles to their taste in the April number of t. Nicholas. Stories, poems and pictures over a wide field, as usual. Annie Matheson tells "A Fairy Tale Without a Moral," and no one will miss such an appendage. Virginia Yeaman Remnitz has a true story, that is none the less interesting on that ac-count. "Two Little Americans at the Court of King Christian IX.." were children of the American minister who were invited to an entertainment at the palace. "The Black Duck" is one that had concealed within it secret dispatches that were conveyed by a young girl through the British lines to General Washington. The story is told by Virginia Woodward Cloud. A cruise "Along Newfoundland and Labrador," and the occupations of the people in that desolate region are described by Gustav Kobbe. Prof Brander Matthews furnishes a genial criticism of Henry Wadsworth Longfellow for his series of sketches of great American authors. Naturalist W. T. Hornaday gossips about "Wild Mice, Rats and Gophers," one of the most widely distributed familes of animals in America. There are four serials, each of which has an interesting installment. They "Chris and the Wonderful Lamp." Albert Stearns; "A Boy of the First Empire," by Elbridge S. Braoks; "Jack Ballister's Fortunes," by Howard, Pyle, and "Three Freshmen: Ruth, Fran and Nathalle," by Jessie M. Anderson. The Century Company, New York.

When the surmame and the initials of the Christian name of a witness appear upon an information in a criminal prosecution it is a sufficient compliance with the statute requiring the names of the state's witnesses to be indersed upon the information before trial.

2. In a prosecution for largeny, if the owner of the property alleged to have been stolen is examined as a witness upon the trial, his testimony that he did not consent to the taking of the property is indispensable to a conviction.

Morris against Merrill, Appeal from Burt county, Reversed and remanded Opinion by Chief Justice Norval.

County commissioners cannot legally transact county business except at a regular session of the county board, or one specially called by the county clerk, of which soulce is given in the mode provided by law.

2. On July 9, 1892, a petition for the location and construction of a ditch was filed with the county clerk of B county, and on the same day the county commissioners adjourned, to meet on August 2 following. On July 16, without any special session of the county board being called, two members of the Board of County commissioners, together with the county commissioners, together with the county surveyer, met at the office of the county commissioners, together with the county clerk, and upon consideration of said petition located the proposed ditch and ordered the construction thereof. Held: That the proceedings were a nullity and the special assessments levied for the purpose of paying for such improvement were absolutely void.

5. Held, from an examination of the evidence, that the loan to the construction company of $2,500,600 of the bonds of the railroad company by the president of the latter was a personal transaction in which said corporation was in no wise interested and not made in pursuance of a conspiracy to which it was a party, having for its purpose the wrecking of the construction company; second, the last named company ratified said transaction by receiving and appropriating the bonds and subsequently paying interest thereon with the knowledge and consent of the stockholders.

4. The litegality of an agreement unless disclosed by the pleadings or proofs of the party claiming through it, must, in order to be available to the adverse party, be specially pleaded.

7. Agreement examined in the light of the evidence and held not void as against public policy.

8. A debt will not be extinguished by the e policy.

S. A debt will not be extinguished by the ayment of a less sum than the amount ctually due, unless based upon a new and actually due, unless based upon a new and sufficient consideration.

9. The settlement of a doubtful or disputed claim is generally a sufficient consideration for a compromise. But in order to have such effect it is essential that there be in fact a dispute or doubt of the rights of the parties. An arbitrary refueal to pay based on the mere pretense of the debtor, make for the obvious purpose of exacting terms which are inequitable and oppressive, is not such a dispute as will of itself support a compromise resulting in a reduction of the amount of his indebtedness.

10. Persons who are directors of two corporations have no implied authority to bind either by contracts with respect to subjects in which their interests are adverse, And all such agreements, unless subsequently ratified, may be avoided at the suit of non-cansenting stockholders.

Jests in which their interests are adverse. And all such agreements inless subsequently ratified, may be avoided at the suit of non-consenting stockholders.

11. When money is paid or concessions exacted through necessity in order to obtain property illegally withheld, where its detention is accompanied by immediate hardship or irreparable injury, such transaction may be avoided on the ground of compulsion, although, perhaps, not amounting to a technical duress.

12. Acquiescence by a principal in the fraudulent or unauthorized act of his agent is in effect a new agreement made with an intent to condone the wrong done and will not be inferred from doubtful evidence, but should be established like any other material fact, by the party asserting it.

13. Mere elapse of time unaffected by other circumstances will not bar the right to rescand a voidable transaction, since it is not for a wrong-leer to impose extreme vigilance or promptitude as conditions to the exercise of the rights of the injured party.

14. But the failure of the injured party to object after knowledge of the wrong is evidence of ratification, and may, especially when long continued, be sufficient of itself to warrant a finding for the party alteging such fact.

15. Objection on account of the absence of parties who are not indispensable to a determination of a controversy should be made by answer or demurrer, otherwise the court may determine the rights of the parties before it.

16. The courts of this state will not examine an order of the circuit court of the United States remanding a cause, for want of jurisdiction, in order to determination in an action by which the order is made.

Conduct Was Justified. A standing joke around the Maine courts is the jurer who stands out and refuses to agree with the cleven obstinate men who don't think as he does. Judges are not apt to take kindly to this style of man and have been known on occasions to give him a terri-ble snubbing. "There is living in this city," said a Bangor gentleman to the Lewiston Journal, "a man who is very proud of a little experience he had as a juror. It was in Judge Cutting's day, and that excellent jurist was on the bench. The jury had heard an important case and failed to agree because this particular juror stood cut against the arguments and solicitations of his fellows and declared that he would stay there till the ants ate him up and carried out his remains through the keyhole before he would consent to what he believed to be an unjust verdict. to what he believed to be an unjust verdict. Judge Cutting asked how they stood and the foreman replied: 'Eleven to one, your honor.' 'Who is the one?' asked the judge, angrily. Let him stand up.' The juror arose and received a scathing rebuke from Mr. Cutting, who peremptorily discharged him from further duty. The case went over to the next term and was tried again, resulting in a verdict in accordance with the sulting in a verdict in accordance with the views of the one juror. It was then taken to the law court on motion for a new trial and was upheld by the full bench as manifestly right. The man says whenever he thinks of that case he thanks God he had the sand to stick to what he b lieved to be right and take the rebake a mistaken judge gave him for so doing." This will do for an exceptional case, but the one man against
