An interesting experiment in the government of a native state is about to be made by the British government in the case of Mysore, whose maharajah died recently, after reigning with conspicuous ability for some years. His representative assembly carried the elective principle in local self-government further in certain respects than has been found expedient in other Indian territories. The prime minister, Sir Shesradi Iyer, believes that it will be possible during the long minority of the child heir to con-tinue the government of Mysore on the liberal lines which the late prince laid down. The government of India has accordingly instituted for Mysore a government that re-produces on a small scale some of the features of the system of a governor general in council. By a proclamation issued at Bangalore the administration of the state is vested in the queen regent and the prime minister. the following from Ezekiel xill, 18-20: "Thus assisted by an executive council of three members, of which the prime minister is president. The practical government will rest with the president in council. His authem from your arms." It is held thority in regard to the executive council will correspond to that of the governor saw in the dim future the aral in the supreme council of India. He will distribute the work of the state govern ment, assigning to each of his three coun cillors a special branch, and he will regulate the business at meetings of the council All questions of difficulty or of policy will be referred to him, and he will decide them personally or refer them to the full council, as he may deem best, ...

> The German emperor, wilful as he is, is not altogether incapable of learning a leason. It is evident that the bitter feeling manifested after the opening of the new Reichstag building at the omission of the superscription to "the German People" made lasting impression upon him. It is reported that during his recent visit to Kiel in connection with the opening of the Baltic ship canal, he remarked repeatedly that he wished the opening ceremony to be a popular fes tival, in the widest sense of the term, with especial consideration for all classes of his subjects. The tribunes and pavilions which had been crected for the reception of the spectators did not appear to him to be suffi ntly large, and he expressed the wish commodious accommodation that more should be provided for the masses, and, it possible, that there should be no lack of op portunities for obtaining refreshment.
