THE EXPLOITS OF **
BRIGADIER GERARD. THE KING HELD THE BRIGADIER

II.

I had now no doubt at all about getting into the yard, but I had very considerable and a sneak, but I had not understood the misgivings as to how I was to get out again. It would be too humilating, after trying here and trying there to have to so had. here and trying there, to have to go back to my hole again in despair, or to be arrested by the guards outside, and thrown into those damp underground cells which are reserved for prisoners who are caught in escaping. I set to work, therefore to plan what I should do. I have never, as you know, had the chance of showing what I could do as a general. Sometimes, after a cover punishment my jailers might inflict upon cruid do as a general. Sometimes, after a ever punishment my jailers might inflict upon capable of thinking out surprising combinations, and have felt that if Napoleon had intrusted me with an army corps, things might have gone differently with him. But, however that may be, there is no doubt that in the small stratagems of war, and in that guickness of invention which is so necessary for an officer of light cavalry, I could hold my own against any one. It was now that the cold sweat from fuy brow, and asked mywould not fail me.

The inner wall which I had to scale was built of bricks, twelve feet high with a row of spikes upon the top. The outer i had only caught a glimpse of once or twice, when the gate of the exercise yard was open. The space between the walls was over twenty feet, and I had reason to believe that there were no sentries there, except at the gates. On the other hand, I knew that there was a line of soldlers outside. Behold the little nut, my friends, which I had to open with no crackers save these two hands.

One thing upon which I relied was the height of my comrade, Beaumont. aiready said that he was a very tall man, six feet at least, and it seemed to me that if I could mount upon his shoulders and get my hands upon thes pikes, I could easily scale the wall. Could I pull my big com-panion up after me? That was the question, for when I set forth with a comrade, even though it be one for whom I bear no affec-tion, nothing on earth would make me abandon him. If I climbed the wall and he could not follow me. I should be compelled to return to him. He did not seem to concern himself much shout it, however, so I hoped that he had confidence in his own activity.

Then another very important matter the choice of the sentry who should be on duty in front of my window at the time of our attempt. They were changed every two hours to insure their vigilance, but I, who watched them closely each night out of my window, knew that there was a great differ-ence between them. There were some who ence between them. There were some who were so keen that a rat could not cross the yard unseen, while others thought only of their own ease, and could sleep as sound y leaning upon a musket as if they were at home upon a feather bed. There was one especially, a fat, heavy man, who would retire into the shadow of the wall and doze so comfortably during his two hours that I have dropped pieces of plaster from my window at his very feet without his observing it. By good luck this fellow's watch was due from 12 to 2 upon the night which we had fixed upon for our enterprise.

As the last day passed I was so filled with and biting his nails like one who is deep in thought. "Courage, my friend," I cried, slapping him on the shoulder. "You will see your guns before another month is past." "That is all very well," said he. "But whither will you fly when you get free?" "To the coast," I answered, "All comes right for a brave man, and I shall make straight for my regiment." "You are more likely to make straight for the underground cells, or for the Portsmouth hulks," said he. "A soldier takes his chances," I remarked. "It is only the poltroon who reckons always upon the worst."

I raised a flush in each of his sallow cheeks at that, and I was glad of it; for it was the first sign of spirit which I had ever observed in him. For a moment he put his hand out toward his water jug, as though he would have hurled it at me, but then he shrugged his shoulders and sat in silence once more, biting his nails and scowling down upon the Artillery a very bad service by bringing him back to them.

I never in my life have known an even-ing pass as slowly as that one. Toward nightfall a wind sprang up, and, as the darkness deepened, it blew harder and harder until a terrible gale was whistling over the moor. As I looked out of my window I could clouds were flying low across the heavens. The rain was pouring down, and what with its hissing and splashing and the howling and screaming of the wind, it was impossible for me to hear the steps of the sentinels. "If I cannot hear them," I thought, "then it is unlikely that they can hear me," and I waited with the ulmost impatience until the inspector should have come round for his nightly peen through our services. through our grating. Then, having peeped through the darkness and seen nothing of the sentry, who was doubtless crouching in some corner out of the rain, I felt that the moment was come. I removed the bar, pulled out the stone and motioned to my companion to pass

In the darkness I could hear the fellow's he was teaterth chattering, and I wondered whether a afternoon. man ever had such a partner in a desperate enterprise. I seized the bar, however, and mounting upon my stoot, I thrust my head and shoulders into the hole. I had wriggled through as far as my waist, when my companion selzed one suddenly by the knees and yelled at the top of his voice:

But a minute passed and yet another, with no sound save the heavy, snoring, breathing of the synseless wretch upon the floor. Was it possible, then, that amid the fury of the storm his warning cries had passed un-heeded? At first it was but a tlay hope, another minute and it was probable, another

As the last day passed I was so filled with nervous agitation that I could not control myself, but ran ceaselessly about my c 1, like a mouse in a cage. Every moment I thought that the warder would detect the looseness of the bar, or that the sentry would observe the unmortared stone, which I could not conceal outside, as I sto d within As for my companion, he sat brooding upon the end of his bed, looking at me in a sidelong fashion from time to time.

The Faubourg St. Antoine—but not for a soldier and a gentleman like me.

However, the heavy breathing of the sentery leng time before he recovered his senses. I gaged him, therefore, and bound in with strips of blanket to the bed, so that in his weakened condition there was good reason to think that, in any case, he might not get free before the next visit of the warder. But now again I was faced with new difficulties, for you will remember that I had relied upon his height to help me over the walls. I could have sat down and over the walls. I could have shed tears of despair had not the thought of my mother and the emperor come to sustain me. "Courage," said I. "If it were any one but Etienne Gerard he would be in a bad fix now; that is a young man who is not so easily caught."

I set to work, therefore, upon Beaumont's sheet as well as my own, and by tearing them into strips and then placing them to-gether I made a very excellent rope. This I tied securely to the center of my iron bar, which was a little over a foot in length. Then I slipped out into the yard, where the Then I slipped out into the yard, where the rain was pouring and the wind screaming louder than ever. I kept in the shadow of the prison wall, but it was as black as the ace of spades, and I could not see my own hand in front of me. Unless I walked into the sentinel I had nothing to fear from him. When I had come under the wall I threw up my bar, and to my joy it stuck the very first time between the spikes at the top. I climbed up my rope, pulled it after me, and dropped down on the other side. Then I scaled the second wall, and was sitscaled the second wall, and was ing astride among the spikes upon top, when I saw something twinkle in the darkness beneath me. It was the baythe darkness beneath me. It was the bayonet of the sentinel below, and so close was it (the second wall being lower than the first) that I could easily, by leaning over, have unscrewed it from its socket. There he was, humming a tune to himself, and cuddling up against the wall to keep himself warm, little thinking that a desperate man within a few feet of him was within an ace of stabibng him to the heart with his own weapon. I was already bracing myself for the spring, when the fellow, with an oath, shouldered his musket, and I heard his steps squelching through the mud as he resumed squelching through the mud as he resumed his beat. I slipped down my rope, and, leaving it hanging. I ran at the top of my speed across the moor.

with Their Cases. Judge Dundy announced yesterday that he proposed to adopt a new rule in cases coming up before him in the criminal branch of the federal court. He said that the court had been imposed upon in the past by the floor. I could not but think, as I looked at attorneys and their clients, and in many in-lim, that perhaps I was doing the Flying stances the government had paid for attorneys and witnesses of the defense, when the defendant was abundantly able to pay such expenses. This practice he intended to stop in the future whenever he was able to determine that the financial standing of the defendant was sufficient to pay the expenses incurred in the defense of his own case. He stated that he wanted attorneys to be ready to hear

Yesterday the coroner's jury rendered a verdict of suicide, caused by temporary insanity, in the case of Charles P. Simmonds, who was found dead at the door of his residence at Forty-third and Vinton streets Tuesday merning. A number of witnesses testified that Simmonds had been mentally un-sound at times for some time past and that while in that condition he had frequently de-clared that he was not going to live much longer. He had made a similar remark as he was leaving his work at 3 o'clock Monday
