ROBBED WIDOW AND ORPHAN

Funds of an Investment Company Misappropriated and Squandered.

LITTLE IS LEFT FOR THE CREDITORS

Colorado Security Company Goes by the Board and Its President Flees After Stealing Half a Million Dollars.

DENVER, June 18.—Henry J. Aldrich, president and general manager of the Colorado Securities company, has disappeared, and the creditors of the concern are making strenuous efforts to ascertain his whereabouts. Inquiries for the missing man have brought to light one of the greatest sensations known in Colorado.

Five weeks ago Mr. Aldrich left Denver without giving notice of his proposed departure, and it now thought he has gone either to Australia or the Sandwich islands. The hasty exit of Aldrich is due to the fact that a warrant for his arrest, based on the indictment of the grand jury, was about to be served. The charge is misappropriation of funds entrusted to his care. Mr. Aldrich also acted as treasurer of St. John's cathedral for ten years and was recognized in Denver as a man of most sterling worth and deep religious character.

From 300 to 400 ranch titles are clouded by the acts of Aldrich, who diverted funds invested by persons to make good the shortage in maturing obligations occasioned by the depreciation in real estate. He guaranteed principal and interest on loans and then began the downward course, which culminated in the appointment of a receiver three months ago. Even then there was no intimation of anything wrong, and the disclosures only came to the surface with the work of the receiver in scanning the books.

The heaviest loss will fall on widows and orphans in the east, whose earnings and savings were entrusted to the company for investment at a high rate of interest. One of the most distressing cases is that of a widow at Bloomington, Ill. She gave her whole fortune to the security company and is now supported by the county authorities. The debts will aggregate from $400,000 to $500,000, and every title issued by the company has to be examined by the court before its validity can be stablished.

It is said that the failure of the Chamberlin Investment company, which occurred here three years ago and presented liabilities of $3,500,000 and assets that afterwards realized $250, will not be as bad as the final showing of the Colorado Securities company.

W. F. Hinnan of Boston is here representing eastern creditors. He says the Equitable Loan company of New York is one of the heaviest creditors.

FOREST FIRES RAGING.

Pennsylvania Towns Threatened with a Fiery Destruction.

BRADFORD, Pa., June 18.—A fire was started yesterday in the Hemlock slashings between Buttsville and Ormsby, and could not be put out until considerable damage had been done. Two hundred men are at work and have the fire under control. It is not thought the fire will spread any further unless a high wind should spring up. Every available man is fighting fire, and their services are worth from $2.50 to $5 per day. The fires in the vicinity of Ritersville and Keshuqua are now confined to a stretch of territory eight miles long and three miles wide. Large embankments have been thrown up about Keshuqua, and it is believed the town is safe, but a large force of men are on the scene, ready for any emergency. Millions of feet of logs and lumber have been destroyed, and hundreds of acres of standing timber. Everything is as dry as tinder and burns like chaff. A high wind would do untold damage. West of this city the sky is overhung by smoke, and fires appear to be raging in the woods near Sugar Run and Woodsport. No news has been received from that section as yet.

Cromwell Monument Bill Withdrawn.

LONDON, June 18.—Justin McCarthy, M. P., in the House of Commons last night protested against the government offering an insult to Ireland by proposing to erect a monument to Oliver Cromwell. He moved a reduction of the vote by £500. The motion was carried by a vote of 220 years to 83 nays. Mr. John Morley, chief secretary for Ireland, thereupon withdrew the proposal for the monument. Conservative newspapers comment upon the tight place in which the government is finding itself. The Times in a leader points to the paralysis of the administration which is compelled to appoint a unionist, Viscount Hampden, as governor of New South Wales, after a scandalous delay, because the appointment of the liberal candidate would have endangered the defeat of the liberal candidate at the by election to choose his successor.

Scarlet Fever Signs Up.

The prevalence of scarlet fever or any other contagious disease need not alarm you if you use Allen's Hygienic Fluid. It is the ideal preventive medicine—cleansing, purifying and healing. No household should be without it.

For Better Fire Protection.

The executive committee of the Commercial club held a joint conference today with committees from the city council and Board of Fire and Police Commissioners relative to better fire protection, in accordance with resolutions recently passed by the latter board. The question of improved service was discussed.

A committee, with Dudley Smith as chairman, was appointed to draft resolutions endorsing the action of the Board of Fire Commissioners.

Held for Robbing the Carson Mint.

CARSON, Nev., June 18.—The examination of William Pickler, on whose premises the bullion supposed to have been stolen from the United States mint was found, has been concluded and Pickler has been held to answer. His mistress, who furnished the information against him, has now become reconciled and contradicted her previous statements. Other evidence against Pickler was adduced strongly indicating his guilt.

LOST MAN'S LANE.

BY ANNA KATHERINE GREENE.

CHAPTER V.

I am a young man, but I hope I have some of the virtues of an older one. However confounded by the turn thus given to my suspicions, I did not allow myself to be swerved from the path which my judgment had laid out for me. Finding it to be not far from the hour when I had a right to expect Mr. Simmons, and correctly judging that he would bring some such man with him as a constable, I only waited for their coming to institute a rigid search of this place. I had told the two gentlemen at their first appearance that this was done with the owners' permission, and even at their entreaty; and seeing the calmness of Miss Knollys, the stolid indifference of the brother, who seemed to take the whole affair as a matter of course, and Lucetta's spirited but by no means repellant bearing, they accepted my assurances and went cheerfully, though not carelessly, about their work. Mr. Simmons alone stopped to whisper once in my ear as we went down the tunnel-shaped hall through which Miss Grant had fled on that fatal night: "But what about the grave in the woods and the body that was buried there!" To which I whispered back: "One grave is not enough for us to find; if we come across no more that one can be easily explained." And I whispered in one short word whose it was.

It was a rambling place and we were hours going through it, but though we followed Miss Knollys' suggestion and visited both cellar and attic, we found nothing in any way suggestive of crime or death. With many apologies to the young ladies, we were about to leave the house when Lucetta, gliding to my side, touched my arm and said: "You will not forget our compact. Mr. Trohm's house is to be searched also, is it not?" To which I answered by a decisive "Yes," which made her cheeks flush and bright light come into her eyes. "If you do not find anything," said she, "come back to me. I have no faith in his cheerful airs and smiling hospitality, and what you fail to discover I will. For mark you there is certainly some one of dangerous character in this vicinity, and who should it be if not the persecutor of my mother?"

Deprecating this assertion, which looked a little too much like revenge, but yet anxious to keep my word with her at all hazards, I followed the two gentlemen into the road, and quietly explained the necessity which our invasion of this peaceable dwelling behind us had occasioned. "We shall have to go through Mr. Trohm's also," said I, and though the constable was for demurring, Mr. Simmons at once fell in with the project, saying:

"Oh, Mr. Trohm won't care; he will rather enjoy showing off the neatness of his dwelling."

And so he did. For when he learned our errand he showed the utmost alacrity in opening all the doors and ushering us into every nook and corner of his comfortable domicile. "Of course, I know you don't expect to find anything," he laughed. "but none the less do I admire your thoroughness and the extreme justice shown toward my interesting young neighbors. What do you think of my pictures, and what do you think of the neat little pincushions you will find on every bureau, and all stuck full of pins?"

Not exactly liking this sally, which somehow seemed out of place, I answered lightly, but took care to survey the whole house, and especially the cellar, with a care that evidently aroused surprise in my country colleague. But I found nothing; no, not the least trace of anything in the least sinister, and when, the formality over, we all stepped into the open sunshine, I could not but ask myself if my expedition were destined to failure, and if my plan of procedure had not been too open and brusque.

A smile from Mr. Trohm as he bade me goodby rather served to emphasize this decision in my own mind. It was not like any other I had seen on his face and showed that under the geniality of his appearance lay depths of sarcastic enjoyment in other people's discomfiture that went far toward explaining the inveterate course he had taken in reference to Althea Knollys.

"I must see those girls again," thought I. "Lucetta may be right. But—" My cogitations got no farther, for at the first turn of the road we came upon Lucetta standing like a wraith by the wayside, her bent finger laid upon her lip.

"I see," she cried, "that you have discovered nothing. Now may I see what I can do to lift the suspicion which rests upon those who live on this unhappy road?"

"But what can you do?" I objected. "Why, you are as frail as that bough of alder under which you are standing."

"Never mind; you are sure, are you not, that people are killed here by some strange and unforeseen means?"

"We have thought so."

"Very well, come back here at nightfall and see me brave Mr. Trohm. If he is the man I think he is, results will follow which you will do well to watch. But you must be secret. He must consider himself safe from all prying eyes."

I stared at the young girl in amazement. There was fever in her eyes and on her flushed cheek, but there was a stern determination also, such determination as a martyr shows for a cause which he deems holy.

"You will do this?" I exclaimed.

"I will do this," said she. "Remember, at the sunset hour, in Mr. Trohm's garden."

"A whippoorwill's cry shall be the signal," I assured her. "When you hear that you may know that a watchful eye is on you both."

"And heaven defend me," she murmured, and was gone before any of us could utter another word.

I pass over the comments of my companions, who regarded the girl as half mad, as well as the arguments with which I induced them to keep silence over this adventure, till I had given it the test her earnestness demanded, and come to the hour when, concealed in a knot of bushes overlooking Mr Trohm's garden, I waited for the sinking of the sun below the wooded slopes behind me. I had crept to my place quite unperceived, I thought, and if there were no dogs about might reasonably hope to remain undisturbed in my concealment. Mr. Trohm, whom I had been enabled to keep in sight from my first minute of approach, was working among his flower beds, and as his manner evinced neither perturbation nor curiosity, I judged that he looked for no more visitors in Lost Man's Lane that night. Suddenly I heard a rustle; it was very faint, but as the sun sank at that moment I raised the cry that had been agreed upon between Miss Knollys and myself,
