WORK FOR THE FOOL KILLER Three Girls Badly Frightened by a Bogus Ghost-One Will Die, CHICAGO, June 19 .- An unknown man

played ghost at the Paris laundry on Thirtyfirst street last night and so badly scared three of the girls that they are dangerously ill today, one of them with but faint hopes of recovery. The girls, Alva Reidel, Hattle Reidel and Hattle Litz, were members of the night force at the laundry. About 4:30 this morning one of them saw a white draped figure before the window and ran shricking for help. The three remained on watch for a time, when the figure again suddenly appeared and with an unearthly groan glides nto the darkness. The three girls swooned and when found half an hour later all were still unconscious. Physicians say that Alva Reidel will probably die and that the other two are in a critical condition

CHAPTER I—IN HIDING.

(Copyrighted, 1952.)

It was in old Chrysalis hall, where Cecil to be my friend; prove it now. A friend in my present situation will be next best to Dreeme so nearly suffered martyrdom and Densdeth served the devil, that I met with "This is cheerful," I rejoined. "How long an adventure, not, indeed, to be compared to Is this agreeable situation likely to last?"
"Heaven knows. Sit down and talk of something else. Talk of old times."
I did, and presently his mood changed for the batter. We sat till the light began to theirs, yet worth the telling, as I hope to prove. Chrysalis fascinated me when first I saw Apparently there were many others of the same opinion, for Chrysalis was crowded. The last successor of Janitor Locksley gave me little encouragement, but I was not to be turned away. I selected the apartment that turned away. I selected the apartment that guess. He had heavily bribed the janitor suited me best of those to which I could gain and that may account for it. But he looked access and paid the tenant what he asked to as if he had eaten much less than would rede it to me. Thus I became possessed of a small bedroom and a large parlor, amply provided with every discomfort which could be expected in so old a building.

In forty years there seems to have been but little improvement in the sociability of Chrysalls. My immediate neighbors were invisible and inaudible. I had only the janitor's word that the other rooms upon my corridor were tenanted. Occasionally, when coming in late at night, I heard sounds of carousal in remote portions of the structure, and there was a piano (not to be located by any effort of the ear) which often uttered the prayer om Semiramide and never anything else In short, Chrysalis was quite what I had thought it would be.

My arrival must have been unnoticed in a place so given over to minding its own busi ness. I caused no commotion, for I bought my predecessor's furniture as it stood, and the trifling matter of the trunks was man-aged with exemplary quiet. But once, in the first two weeks of my tenantry, did I see a sign of any dweller in the rooms that opened on my corridor. That single occasion had something of mystery in it—enough to promise an adventure in a place so suitable as Chrysalis to strange occurrences.

conversation was a doubt whether money was powerless to help him or the sum I had One morning as I was dressing some one rapped smartly upon my door. It required less than a minute to make myself fairly presentable, and then I answered the knock. named was too small. for friendship, and I am well aware that curiosity can have no part in anything so to one was there. I looked along the corridor. It was empty, but opposite me was good thing, but the ability to get along a door that was slightly ajar, and in the without it is much better. Such was my crack of it I saw an eye that caught just enough light to be visible. It vanished inpuzzling over Dane's condition. I said to myself that I was not doing my duty to stantly and the door was softly closed.

I liked this performance very little; him-a favorite self-deception of the curious. "In hiding," I said, "and confessedly without looked like a trick to subject me scrutiny. I stepped across the hall and knocked several times upon the door, but resources, what will be the end of the man? could get no response. During the day I asked the janitor about my neighbor.
"He's a queer old fellow," was the reply. stimulated by the discovery that a key which I had brought in my pocket from my last lodgings in a city far away fitted the lock

'I don't know anything about him."
"At least you know his name," said I. "Oh, yes; of course I know his name." inswered, with great frankness.

I thanked him brusquely for his lesson in the etiquette of Chrysalis, and added that when I wanted to know another tenant's name I would guess at it. He nodded ap-provingly and turned away. It may have been a week later that I was returning to my room, after midnight. It happened that there was rain and I wore rubbers, which made my steps noiseless on the stone floors of Chrysalis. My corridor, which was never light, was dark as Erebus that night. The usual feeble jet of gas was out and the high window at the end of the hall admitted scarcely a ray. The densest of the shadows lay under it, and thence, as I advanced, there came to meet me the sharr sound of metal falling on the stones, paused, a bit startled. Then a match that made no noise was struck upon the floor and n the light of it I saw the face of Frederick Dane.

Had it been any other face I might not have recognized it by the scant illumination not mistake, for I had studied it with too deep attention in the years when we were friends. I say friends, though I think his feeling toward me had never justified the name of friendship, but I had certainly preferred him to any man on earth, and would have made the last possible sacrifice to win his regard. I had known him at college and for a year afterward, but had not seen him since. I had been told that he was there was more than accident in this mat-ter; I had tried my varied assortment of dissipating his small property and generally

It was with infinite pleasure that I found him again. I had had no idea that he was in New York. I did not give a second's ime to wondering what he was doing there at midnight before the door of the mysterious old man called "Smith." Instead, I sprang forward with a cry of welcome.

Instantly the match went out. I heard the click of a key in the lock. The door was hastily opened, and would have been hastily closed again had I not thrust in my foot. "Fred!" I exclaimed, "It's I. Open the door and—"
"Hush!" he breathed, in a voice that checked me instantly. "Doo't speak my name. Come in. I obeyed, wondering at his manner. He closed and locked the door. Then he lit a jet of gas, and turned toward me. I saw that he was changed. His face was thin, quarters it is Mr. Lamont's idea to push on to the Yellowstone country, stopping at Omaha on his return. General Manderson wired the secretary yes-terday morning at St. Louis as to his itinerary and inviting Mr. Lamont and his party to be his guests during their stay in Omaha, should they decide to stop any length of time. General Manderson said in speaking of the visit of the secretary: "The committee visit of the secretary: "The committee which met General Schofield while here should be called together and wait upon Secretary Lamont in a body. The train arrives in Council Bluffs at 12:15 and the committee might accompany the party to this city and hold an informal reception at the Webster street depot, should Mr. Lamont decide to go en without delay.
