I was for drawing back, for I thought that I had found my friend at his devotions. But his tears in-clined me to stay that I might comfort him with the apples of pertinent advice. "A good morning," I bade him, speaking softly and putting my hand on his shoulders. softly and putting my hand on his shoulders. But he never gave me a word of answer, but to sigh and groan and read upon his book "Be of good heart, Sir James," I said to "He of good nears, Sir Janus, I said to him, "for I am going to the town's authority and the privy council, with whom I am in good odor; and, with their help, we shall soon have yon knave by the heels. Then he was condemned to death at Treves, and I provided money wherewith he bribed his failers and so made his escaps. I have received him into mine own house since his return. Whatever verdict the reader of this book may arrive at as to the actual fate of Mar-shal Ney, he will find Mr. Weston's book to be apart from other considerations, exceed-ingly entertaining. The story of the life of this famous marshal of France is itself fascitating, embracing an almost unbroken suc-cession of thrilling incidents. The main in-terest of the book, however, centers in the events and circumstances surrounding the hero's sentence and execution. Reviewing all the details and incidents touching this portion of Ney's carcer, the author makes a powerful argument to show that "the bravest of the brave" was not mercilessly shot down in cold blood by his countrymen and fellow soldiers, who fairly idoliged the man, but that soluters, who fairly idolized the man, but that he was assisted to escape and a corpo subati-tuted and afterward interred to conceal the act. Having disposed of the accepted ac-count of history that Ney had been shot, the author traces the arrival of a strange per-son in Rowan county, N. C., who first ap-pears there in the year 1819 in the capacity of a schoolmaster, and whose facial appear-ance, demeanor, stature, character, military carriage, wonderful powers of mind and close knowledge of military affairs touching the carriage, wonderful powers of mind and close knowledge of military affairs touching the Napoleonic era, who himself asserted he was the former French marshal, whose chiro-graph even bears close resemblance to that of the latter, and whose library contained books hearing footnotes showing a remark-able knowledge of detail incident to the era in question, all combine to identify this person who bore the name of Peter S. Ney as the former marshal of France. One important matter in the evidence, however, militates n to us ry well ar with i set out k about h not to ere, and which the s h so ryer, and m to us him. ## DEATH VALLEY.

The Famous Desert that Counts Its Victims by the Score.

"I don't know where it got its name," said ferome Fuller of Keeler, Inyo county, to the San Francisco Call, "but it is well named. The Spanish called it Death Valley long before the American occupation of California, and I am told that the Indians had a name somewhat similar, only the word they used meant quick death, instead of death."

Mr. Fuller was speaking of that desert of horrors in the southeast corner of California, near the Nevada line, known and designated as Death Valley. "The deposits of borax," continued Mr. Fuller, "would seem to indicate that this waste spot was once a lake, the waters of which were heavily charged with sodium. It was in all probability of volcanic sodium. It was in all promoting of place on origin. I suppose that there is no place on the planet so near to the popular conception

'I have been told by travelers who have visited the Dead Sea region that it is a paradisc compared with this pestilential spot, the home of venomous reptiles and vermin, and shunned alike by man and beast. Its baked and blistered soil breeds only noxious and venomous things. About the place there is something weird, uncanfiy, grim and ghoul-ish. Even the reptile life is of the most ghastly shape, of rancorous nature and dia-bolically ugly. Its dead do not decompose, but are baked in the scenching heat of court but are baked in the scorching heat of count-less scorching days. No tree, or flower, or shrub, or sign of vegetable life relieves the to weapon but a riding whip. I put hty horse shrub, or sign of vegetable life relieves the prospect of this drear waste spot, which lies 200 feet below the level of the sea and 40 miles. There is no shade and not a drop of moisture ever falls to cool this trackless waste of salt and safd shimmering under a sun that kills and then petrifies.

In 1850 an emigrant train bound for Sacramento, and composed of about thirty persons, attempted roan of Galloway; and I being long of the limb let myself off without peril and lay safely, darned among the undergrowth. For to cross the death trap. Only one of them lived to tell the story. The others parished the safest course and the most peaceable was ever the sweetest to me. I peeped out and saw the young man look from heat and thirst. The sole survivor of this ill-fated train brought out a story ten years following the death of his companions, lured many to destruc-tion in the burning sands of the valley. Something over twenty years ago Lieutenant Wheeler of the army, while on an exploring expedition, ordered the guids to cross the valley. Then Wheeler ordered two sol-diers with fixed bayonets to compel the re-was my heart that I dared not look out lest diers with fixed bayonets to compet the res-luctant native to take up the trail. But Sir James was no ways encouraged "For," said he, "It is all worse than use-less; my shame sits heavy upon me. I am not a man to make complaint, but yesterday i was hurt to death in my tenderst part." "Why," said I, "the knave surely shot not true. You are not wounded. You rode away briskly enough." "Yea." said Sir James, "wounded am I to the heart; for he that shot at me with inten;

The Philistine is a new volce in the wilder-ness of literature. It is a volce of protest, so the title informs us and the name infers. It has many a saucy word to utter against shams and the worship of custom and form and wears the style of the cheap book, with the exception of a novel cover that is unique. The road of the kicker is usually lined with briars; we trust the Phillstine will gather at least a rose here and there. The Philistine, East Aurora, New York.
