He paused and looked toward the landing.
At that moment two men had grasped a barrel of cocoanuts and were carrying it aboard the boat. Howard Forsythe never took his eyes from that barrel until it swung out of view into the hold. Then he turned to me.

regularity. But come, I will show you the sights of Benita," and he led the way slowly loward the entrance to the enclosure. The buildings consisted of a number of small cottages or huts, which were occupied by the white foromen or "bosses," as they were caffed, each of whom had charge of a gang of native diggers. There was also a pretty little villa occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Peter Delby, the former the official representative of the English member of the firm of proprietors.

I soon discovered that Mr. Delby was of no ctical use to the firm at Benita. He was a little man, with simple and unaffected man-ners and no apparent interest in the business her to SEND 11.00 FOR 12.00 WORTH OF SONGS;

Intrusion into their earthly paradise.

The agent for the German firm, Herr Schlitz, was a confirmed drunkard. He occument, Malcolm Love planos sold at factory pied a little room at the top of the main offices. His face was vacant and stupid, and prices. his manners, when he mixed at all with his fellows, absolutely boorish. It was therefore very easy to see that the management of affairs fell almost wholly upon Howard Forzythe. It was he who kept the wheels moving. He arcse early, and passed the day in visiting the kept the wheels early, and passed the day in visiting the early, and passed the day in visiting the different gangs of laborers and seeing that the overseers did their duty. Every evening an allowance. It might be that he desired the stood behind the little grated window of the stood behind the little grated window of the stood behind the report of each that he ignored all the native woman. veranda and handing in the results of his

Mr. Forsythe received the diamonds, placed them in an iron box, thrust that into the safe when the returns were all in, and then went to supper. Afterward he weighed and counted the stones, and recorded them in the firm's books. I watched him often and soon discovered that he never varied his program. Sometimes Mr. Delby of Herr Schlitz would be present when the stones were received, but oftener they were invisible until after supper, when they were invisible until after supper, when they were obliged to see the stones counted and weighed, and to add their signatures to the daily reports. On one or two occasions Herr Schlitz was reported to be too "ill" to be present, but Mr. Delby always came punctually, watched the operations nervously and listlessly, and hurried back to his wife at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. Forsythe appointed me a room on the second floor of the main building—a small, stuffy little apartment, but neatly furnished, and nearly opposite his own room. We all ate in the common dining hall—all, that is, excepting Mr. and Mrs. Delby, who lived exclusively by themselves. All the house in the settlement were set up on high posts. exclusively by themselves. All the house in the settlement were set up on high posts, and the steps were raised at night, this being necessary to guard against the numerous serpents that infested the promonlory, the most vicious being the slender gray asps, or Naja Haje, as they are more properly known. These were regarded with great terror by the natives, and, at intervals each day a pistol shot from some part of the diggings would proclaim that an overseer diggings would proclaim that an overseer was protecting himself or his men from ne of these deadly pests.

The very day after my agrival, while Mr. Porsythe was showing me about the place, he suddenly jumped aside and dashed his heavy heel upon one of these asps, which lay near our path. He laughed when he saw the terror written in my face, and re-sure the old hag could charm nothing else; but the rest of us are in constant fear of receiving a fatal bite. There is no help for you if the polson once gets into your blood. Otherwise this place is pleasant enough, and remarkably healthful into the bargain.

After the first day of two Mr. Forsythe paid little attention to me, but left me to

She sat on the steps a moment and wiped the perspira-tion from her face with a faded red handkerchief, and then she took her basket and started for the gates, where the guard went through the usual ceremony of searching her. Howard Forsythe was leaning from his window, smoking a elgar and watching the guard's deliberate motions.

"Who is the woman?" I asked. "Mother Videaux? No one knows. Some say she is French and others Italian. She speaks English, however, and knows the na-tive language perfectly. I am told she came here when the mines were first opened, the captain of the steamer having rescued her from a wreck in midocean. She lives in that little cottage near the grove, and is neither after the dark comes, unless they're disof use nor any particular bother, so we tolerate her and feed her."
"Does she live slone?" I inquiréd, as her bent figure passed the gate and hobbled up the path toward the grove.

"Entirely so. The natives attribute to her her well, are good-natured enuch to carry them without charge, and her consignee some relative, I suppose—sends her provi-sions in return, but scarcely enough to sup-port her."

He threw away his cigar and returned to his work, while I turned the subject over in my mind and considered what bearings it might have on my mission. It had struck me at once that Mother Videaux was the only mystery in the whole settlement, and absurd though the idea might be, I decided to watch her closely. She came to the encidsure regularly twice a week, and I noticed that each time Forsythe some scrap of food into her basket. in itself aroused my curiosity, as it struck me that his donation was scarcely necessary when the cook presented her with so liberal who came to the enclosure, and made Mother Videaux the sole recipient of his

Then, with a smile, let me advise you to give it up, and return to a life that swill be more pleasant. I was thrust upon my own resources for entertainment, since the "bosses" were rough, uneducated fellows, with whom I had nothing in common.

I lounged in an easy chair in a shady corner of the veranda and decided that the third day from that should see me aboard the steamer and bound for home. My trip to Benita was a failure, but there was enough months.

Hellman Estate. Meyer Hellman at the time of his death eft considerable property, but the encumbrances placed on it were heavy, aggregating $250,000. In October, 1890, I. Gluck, a creditor, alleges that he had a talk with Hellman, and on account of statements made to him, which he relied upon, he thought Hellman worthy of unlimited credit and loaned him $7,500 on a note, this secured on a lot in Johnson's addition, being one of the pieces of property he had in mind tending to make the security gilt edged. The debt ran along until it came time to present it in probate court. Proof was offered and the account shown to have increased to $8,788. Gluck, when this sum was allowed, thought that he would get his money. He was again disappointed, for the court made an order directing Mrs. Hellman to pay but 10 per cent on all of the claims of creditors. This enabled Gluck to draw only $878, as his tributive share. Gluck has demanded that he homestead be turned into court to liquidate his and other creditors' debts. Mrs Heliman proposes to fight this on the theory that when Meyer Heliman in 1891 made her a present of the homestead she gave as a onsideration for it a relinquishment of her lower rights in all of Hellman's other property. Some phases of this question have already been aired before Judge Walton in suits brought to get hold of the life insurance money left by Hellman. These suits are in
