THE PHANTOM

Being chapters from the life and strange adventures of Sir Nicolas Steele, as related by his valet, Hildebrand Biggs.

Michel Grey was missing. All the police in Paris could not have told us more. The man had vanished like a phantom, leaving no word, no message, no letter.

"I replied, thinking, at the same time, what a peculiar looking gentleman he was. I could hardly since you left Dublin, I have seen you, quite calm like, and pretending to see nothing of the start I gave."

"You had taken him from our sight. Whether he was alive or dead, in France or out of France, a willing abettor or the victim of the assassin, neither friend nor enemy could tell. He had gone like the night, and had left us to face the problem as we might."

"I should call him that." "He's a baronet or something, isn't he?" "Exactly; he's Sir Nicolas Steele of Castle Rath, County Kerry."

"I had read him straight, for I'd read him up by this time." "It's a cold morning for taking in the open air," says I, and with that I turned on my heel and left him."

"Now, though I had taken it coolly enough, a duller head than mine could have seen through Sir Nicolas Steele's bluff. 'What's in the wind is this,' said I to myself, when I got back to the hotel, 'you've heard some gossip, my fine gentleman, and you want to get to the bottom of it. It's true that a cousin of yours, Sir Nicolas Steele in Dublin three years ago, when you'll write to him, and what you'll learn won't keep your cousin at the Hotel de Lille, maybe the same as in Europe; more probably he's in America, which gives us a month. Any way it's you that we've got to play, and the sooner the better, for the more time we have the more we know, and yet simple as it seemed, there was something happened later in the day which gave me a new turn at the matter. I do believe that I was struck with the matter all afternoon, making nothing new of it outside the fact that the danger signal had been rung, so to speak, when the railway people were at the station, and I was never so low, or in such a queer way, as when the evening that brought him face to face with Sir Nicolas Steele, who had gone to his life which he was to feel for many years."

"She came to the hotel quite sudden—an auburn-haired, blue-eyed little thing with a bright, clear, and healthy complexion, and with her hair which was wonderful to see. The name down in the visitor's book was 'Dora Grey of Boston, and just above it I saw written 'Michel Grey, artist.' But I didn't mark the man until the following morning, at which time Sir Nicolas Steele came down into the garden that night, the first time for many weeks, was as full of the pair of them as he could be."

"There was a minute when, seeing him clutch the door of the banister and fix his dreadful eyes on me, I thought he was going to strike me. He half raised his hand, but he let it drop quickly again and began to mumble something that I could not hear. His speech was thick like that of a drunk man, and I could have sworn that drink was not the matter with him. Quite otherwise, he appeared to be in great pain, and when he spoke his words were full of gasps and sobs, as if he were in a state of suffering."

"What's that?" said I. "The fellow's a lunatic; that's what he is," he cried, and he began to draw his hat over his eyes. "Where's your shabby baronet?" he asked. "What's that?" said I. "The fellow's a card-sharper and a thief," he went on, and this took me more back than if he'd hit me."

"Look here," said I, "you're a bold man, but you don't want to be horsewhipped out of this hotel, don't say that twice." "Then you mean to say that he isn't?" he asked. "He's a hundred times. A more honorable gentleman does not exist. He's a man who would be for the state you're in, young man, I'd let you know it, too."

"This silenced him for a minute or more, and then he muttered something between his teeth which I could not make out, he continued his stare up at the stars for a quarter of an hour, and then he said to me, 'You're a young American, and he hadn't been in the hotel more than two minutes when I told him you had passed and that I was here. He said to say, he took it as calm as a man hearing of the weather.'"

CUTTING RATES TO ATLANTA

Burlington is Charged with Going Below the Tariff. Competing Lines Make Loud Complaint. Referred to a Meeting of Western Lines Passenger Agents—Eastern Scrutinizing. Encouragement Business.

They have managed to kick up quite a fuss after all over the rates to the Atlanta exposition. Down at Kansas City the roads were making a row for business made over to all kinds of rivalry to capture everything in sight. Just when matters were getting warm the Burlington bobbed up with a special train and a rate that its competitors declared was below the tariff.

The low joint association promptly fined the Kansas City agent of the Burlington for violation of the local agreement. That sort of play would be all right, but the Burlington man sets up the defense that he had nothing to do with the rate named and that all grievances should be filed with the Chicago agents of the road, the general officials, who were responsible for the rates made. That was the general phase on the deal, and the higher authorities of the Burlington allege that the rate was put in simply to meet competition. The whole matter has been referred to the meeting of the passenger agents of the western lines, which will be held in Chicago on Tuesday, to settle the Atlanta rate question. Local passenger men do not expect to have any business for the Atlanta show and look upon the rate question to that point as a disturbing element that had just as well or better be left out.

A row has also been kicked up in the east over rates to the Grand Army of the Republic encampment at Louisville on September 11 to 14. Hot competition for the business has resulted in rate cutting and the consequent fight. The war is a yet confined to the Louisville and Cincinnati territory, but it is extending into this territory, as from present indications the business from the transmissure region will not be worth fighting over.

Place Where Chaos Reigns. The baggage room at the union depot is not so happy a place, and during the departure of trains reminds the observer of chaos on earth. Summer tourists are returning from their annual outings and most of the trunks are of the ponderous Saratoga variety. The room is entirely too small to hold the mass of baggage, and the platform has been brought into requisition when the weather will permit. When the gentle rain begins to fall the entire scene is a picture of confusion, as people fly through the air in a slight boisterous to behold.

Excursion a Success. The Burlington's personally conducted excursions from Los Angeles and San Francisco to Chicago and Boston have proved a great success. The excursion was a success in pattern, yet more money has been expended in their construction to fit them for long distance traveling than in the ordinary car. But one car has been used, and the demand has increased to such an extent that the road through in two Sunday and another will probably be added next Sunday. The excursions start from Chicago on Sunday and from Los Angeles and San Francisco on Wednesday and Thursday of each week.

Preparations are being made by the Missouri Pacific to handle the large crowds expected to attend the exposition. An extra train will be located in the express office just north of the baggage room at the Webster street depot Sunday, the only excursion out being day at Ruser's park. The roads running to the north have sent out a great many excursion trains, and the excursion men of Chicago on Sunday and from Los Angeles and San Francisco on Wednesday and Thursday of each week.
