NEWS FROM COUNCIL BLUFFS.

Office, 12 Pearl Street,-H. W. Tilton, Manager and Lessee,

Friday evening Blodgett went to his attorney, Stewart, and wanted him to draw up an information charging Schurz, attorney for the state of Iowa, with making malicious threats to extort money. Stewart claims he advised Blodgett not to do it, but Blodgett persisted, so that he finally drew up the information. It alleged that Schurz threat-was on hand ready for trial, but his accuser falled to present himself. The case was continued until 11 o'clock and Blodgett was still missing, and so the case was dismissed. In the meantime Willard James, who started the prosecution against Blodgett, had

After emerging from a fight in Justice look's court yesterday afternoon with vicory perched upon his banners, Emil Schurz ran up against Joe Belmont, alias Artresser, last evening, with more doubtful results. Belmont is said to be connected with Barnum & Bailey's circus, and as he had little to yesterday he imbibed quite freely. During he evening he looked for some trouble, and found Schurz, who was willing to supply him with the article he desired. There were a few sharp words bandied, and Belmont struck Schurz in the face. Then Schurz let fly his good right arm, and his clenched fist landed quarely in Belmont's mouth. But it was a slow that worked both ways, for while it disarranged Belmont's complexion consider ably. Belmont's teeth inflicted an ugly wound in the fist, which the doctor who attended to it said might result in blood poisoning. After being locked up Belmont sent a note to his friend, Rohelia Judge, asking him to get him out of jail quick, but at a late hour last night he was still in.

Part Played by Horses to Inveigle Strangers to a Robbers' Den.

"When I was in Nebraska near Snak river, north of the Great Sand hill, in 1859, said an old resident to a reporter of th Lewiston (idaho) Journal, "we had four campe, situated about eighteen miles apart and to go from Thorne's camp to Dunhan camp it was necessary to go through a long piece of pine woods. For a number o months every one who had gone through the woods alone never came back. One day it was necessary that I should go through set out on a horse that I got from a stabl eper near Thorne camp.

"When I had nearly reached the woods five miles out, my horse was taken ill and refused to go on. Clearly to my medical eye it had been poisoned slightly by some one. Soon, what looked like a hunter came along on a horse and offered to swap, taking mine back to the stable if I would leave his near Dunham camp with a transport. I ought near Dunham camp with a trapper. I ought to have seen through this, but did not. I got on to the powerful horse of the stranger and started through the five miles of woods When half way through, without any apparent reason, the horse broke into a trot, a gallog and finally a run, and dashing off the trai through the woods picked his way among trees as nicely as if he had gone that way a hundred times. Pull as I would at the bridle, he paid no attention, but ran the faster. When he had leaped a brook and landed on the sand beyond the marks of footprints alarmed me and I slipped off at the risk of my life. He ran on up a ravine and I hid, fearing that it was a trap, as it afterward proved. In a little while three men armed with rifles came back on the trail, one riding the horse, now as calm as lamb. I picked my way to the road and got out to the camp.

"Two weeks later nineteen of us followed a man who hired a horse at the same place I did. It was taken ill, and the same trap per came along on the same horse. When the horse dashed into the woods, as he had been trained to do, nineteen of us dashed after him and finally arrived at a mountain camp of the robbers. We took every man— seven of them—and, well! law was not well supported out there then, and no court sat nearer than 200 miles. We didn't carry the rascals away from their own camp fire. The trained horse met the fate of its owners."

DESPERATE BATTLE WITH CATTLE THIEVES

Annibilation of the Most Unscrupu lous Band of Thieves Ever Known in the West-The Texas Boys and Their Commander.

The year 1884 will long be remembered by the people of Montana. The country from the Little Missouri to the Powder and Yellowstone rivers was infested by the worst and most unverupulous hand of horse and cattle thieves ever known in the west. Composed of outlaws, ex-cowboys and murderers, crack shots with the revolver and the most daring riders, they scoured the plains and mountains, running off horses and cattle across the border into Canada, where they were disposed of, and after the proceeds of their ill-gotten wealth were squandered in riot and dissipation would return to fill their empty pockets at the expense of the stockmen and ranchers who owned the vast herds that roamed the cattle ranges in Montana and parts of Wyoming and Dakota. For a long time, relates the Philadelphia Times, the residents will meet tomorrow at the Spanish efforts to break up their nefarious business proved unavailing. Posses under sheriffs much excitement among them over the mani- and marshals had been routed on various occasions, as the little cattle towns scattered through this enormous territory could only furnish very inadequate forces to cope with Several fights had taken place between the robbers and some of the stronger posses un-der the leadership of sheriffs noted for bray ery, but these always proved fruitiess, the outlaws managing either to defeat or clude their enemies. Advantage was also being taken of the thieves' reputation by others, who, possessed of a few head of stock and a brand, would run off a small number of cattle in the night from the large head. tle in the night from the large herds, remove the brand, and place their own upon them, knowing the losses would be credited to the cattle thieves. The stockmen began to form plans for the protection of their stock, and secret meetings were hild in several places at which all the large owners were in attendance. Their losses from the boldness of the rustlers was thoroughly discussed, and to put a stop to their career and rid the country of their presence was now their chief object. That the law was unable to render them material assistance was evident and so they concluded that the only remedy was to take t in their own hands.

A DIFFICULT UNDERTAKING. The "round-up" season had begun, and not only was it to be a round-up of cattle, but of cattle thieves as well. Large rewards were offered for their extermination, and shortly after numbers of cowboys, mostly from Texas, began to arrive in Montana, and put themselves in communication with the committee of cattle owners. The induce-ments offered by the stockmen were liberal and excited the cupidity of the cowboys, who were eager to begin the war at once. men who were to pit themselves against the thieves were as wild and reckless a lot as themselves, and had an advantage in knowing that the people were with them and were willing to overlook acts that would not be tolerated in a more settled country. They knew their lives were tak.n in their hands and expected to give and receive no mercy in their encounters. They were fully equipped and outfitted by the cattlemen, and were to travel and scout the country in small bodies, and wherever signs of the thieves were discovered by any one party notification was to be sent, as far as practicable, to the others, so that the concentration of forces might be effected.

It must not be supposed, however, that the obbers traveled openly in one large band. It would have been a far easier matter to deal with them had this been the case. As a general rule they roamed in small bands and had certain points at which to meet, when, having collected a good-sized herd, they would drive them across the border hur-Erzeroum and Kharput, will start for their posts immediately, waiting no longer for their exequateurs, delaying the issuance of which has already kept them here two months. Their exact number could not be ascertained, death of his friend Harris tended to make although it was estimated there must have this enmity the more bitter and uncomeen at least 200 of them

STOCKMEN AND SETTLERS UNITE. When news of the new move of the stock-nen became known it was looked upon with favor by the settlers and residents of the little cattle towns, who were anxious to see the thieves run out of the country, as they also had grievances against them, for many a night had they taken possession of their towns and made it hideous with their wild and riotous behavior. Without warning they would come charging through, shooting at anything that struck their fancy. Saloons and stores would be rifled and plundered, and any one who had the temerity to remon strate or resist was shot down without mercy The cowboys who had enlisted under th banner of the stockmen numbered nearly 250. Accustomed to a wild and reckless ca-reer and holding life almost as cheaply as the cattle thieves themselves, it is not to be dered at that they should be anxious for the word to start on their man-hunting expedi-ion, especially as they knew they would be well paid for their services. They are divided into detachments, at the lead of each being men who were picked for their noted bravery and coolness and competent to enforce obedience from those under them. There was no need for specific instructions. All were aware of the nature of the work before them. They never stopped to count the cost of a meeting with those who were as deadly with the revolver and as reckless and regardless of danger as them-selves. As has been said, the majority of those who were employed by the cattlemen to run down the thisves were cowboys from Texas, but there were also many others beonging in that country, who were thoroughly acquainted with every foot of the land through which the cattle roamed. These were distributed through the different tachments to act in the capacity of scouts and couriers.

TO HUNT FOR HUMAN GAME. The little town of Spearfish, S. D., the point from which the small army of human hunters were to start, was lively, indeed for a couple of weeks previous to the contemplated move. Day and night they began to arrive, singly and by twos and threes All presented the appearance of having made a long journey. The Texans had traveled by rail as far north as Sidney, Neb., and Pierre, S. D. At these points ponies were purchased—the cowboys invariably has his favorite saddle, bridle and equipments, and always carries them, no matter where he may roam—and the remainder of the jour-ney was made overland, the distance of a little over 200 miles being covered in from eight to ten days.

Their time spent in Spearfish preparatory to starting on the trail was noticeable for the cordial manner in which the cowboys were entertained by the citizens. In fact, the town was turned over to them, and to their credit, be it said, no advantage was taken of hospitality thus offered. They became on the best of terms with the inhabitants, and for years after the complete rout of the cattle thieves the cowboys were always welcome visitors to Spearfish, which has, up to the present day, remained their rendezvous during the winter's idle months.

Of the men who had been appointed as leaders of the different bands was one who was well known among the local cowboys and cattlemen. His name was Jack O'Hara. He had a reputation second to none among the rough riders of the country. About 40 years of age, slight of build, small of stature, at first glance one would hardly give a second thought to him. From his acquaintances you soon found that he was a man slow to anger, firm in his friendship, the quickest shot and the finest horseman on the range and always with the under dog in a fight. Many a luckless tenderfoot had he saved from being put through the rough initiations of his reckless companions on a town-painting

A short time previous to the organizing of the stockmen O'Hara, who had a small herd of cattle in the vicinity of the Little Missouri river, had missed several head of stock and suspected the rustiers of the theft. He had joined a posse organized by Deputy burrah. Sheriff Fred Willard of Spearfish to pursue tem of disease treatment.

The success of Drs. Copeland and Shepard in the treatment of all chronic diseases, which has been so abundantly testified to, does not rest upon the use of any specific or patented article or appliance, but upon the khawledge and skill that long years of study, training and experience have given them and which enables them to give to each case the special treatment it requires. They have their own private laboratory, where, under their direct supervision, prescriptions to suit each individual case are prepared and compounded from the best and pures drugs obtainable. Medicines are not manufactured in job lots to be sold at a big profit, but are furnished to each patient under treatment with them free of charge.
