Councilmen Becoming Disgusted with Experts Examining Bolla's Books, Several members of the city council are acquiring a huge disgust on account of the $20 a day experts who are making a life job out of the examination of the books of Henry Bolln. A member of the finance committee happened into the committee room where the experts are at work the other day and ound one of them industriously engaged in target practice on flies with a strip of rubber. while the others were watching his antics in contented indolence. This particular member says that he has had enough of it, and is And yet, great though his triumph seemed perfectly willing to throw up the whole busi- to be, I doubt whether to the day of his ness at any time. Meanwhile the cost of the expert examination is steadily mounting up

MYSTERY.

(Copyright, 1895, by Irving Bacheller.)

As I said at the beginning, this audacious sublication of the treaty whilst the congress was still in sitting caused the most profound sensation throughout Europe. Even Le Grand, ambitious as he was, must have been satisfied. His name was in every one's mouth. How had he possibly managed to pluck from the diplomatists their secret? For no one doubted-or, indeed, could doubtthat, in the main, the treaty as published in was clear that it could not be a mere clever invention. The diplomatists themselves were in despair. True, they maintained an appearance of serenity, but they were really at their wits' end to know how to account for the trick that had been played upon them and how to repair the mischief that had been

Of course, they did what diplomatists always do in such cases—they disavowed the treaty as published. They could do this safely, as it was now a certainty that some f the most important provisions would have a be modified, but this disavowal is such a stereotyped resource of embarrassed di-plomacy that it did not deceive even the outside world. And, of course, it could have no effect on their own state of mind. They looked askance at each other; they fell be-trayed by one of their own number. It seemed as if any further sittings would be Yet, for the sake of appearances, useless.

"The diplomats themselves were in despair." Shrievaljieff said to the prince, as far as ecrecy was concerned, it seemed as if they might as well meet in the marketplace as the foreign office. Hers, however, I may at once say that these fears proved unfounded. The secrecy of their proceedings was not sgain violated. and in due course they pieced together another treaty which did not suffer from pre-mature publication, and which holds good to the present day.

It was generally thought that their success AND STILL THEIR PAY GOES ON. t the second attempt was due to Le Grand's bsence. He had brought off his great coup and he took care not to return. It might even have been dangerous for him to do so, for it was certainly through his agency that the draft-treaty, however obtained, had been published. Whether he ever suspected me of having tricked him in the matter of the envelope I do not know. He never made any suggestion to that effect. In fact, he was not at all the man to allow that he could by any possibility he outwitted. And in everything possibility be outwitted. And in everything connected with the treaty he kept up an of mystery, content with the evident that in some way or other he had complished what had seemed to be impossible niserable. "Do you mind writing a letter or two for me?" he said, after the first preliminary greetings. "You are always so good and kind. And I have been obliged to give Maubeuge a holiday today."

Of course I was delighted to be of any service. He dictated one or two short notes d, when I had written them, he said:
"I hope you will dine with me this even ing. I am really depending on you to cheer me up a little. This fatal business of the freaty has been such a grievous blow to me." I accepted his invitation.

"Now don't run away meanwhile." he added. "I generally take a little nap, as you know, at this time, but I shan't be asleep more than half an hour. Meanwhile there are some journals, or perhaps you have letters to write."

"Thank you," I said, "that will suit me admirably. I will plunge into my correspondence while you take a dive into oblivion."

For a moment I did not realize tha it was the prince who was speaking. When I did realize it, I pricked up my ears involuntarily. What was he babbling about in his narcotic slumber? Heavens! it was My only child was dangerously sick for four days with cholers infantum. Our best doctor could not help her. We concluded to try Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. Some of the phrases were confused, inconsistent, fragmentary, but over and over again came from beneath the handkerchief the words "clause thirteen" (in French, of course), and then, in thirteen" (in French, of course), and then, in fashion more or less disconnected, the actual provisions of that uniucky clause. Sent to Prison for Life. ST. LOUIS, Oct. 2.—A special to the Post

I sat there paralyzed with astonishment; the pen had fallen from my hand; I was as one in a dream. Here, then, at last, was the solution of the mystery. Nor was the viliain far to seek. Maubeuge, sitting where Hayes, better known as "Pea Ridge," pleaded guilty of murder in the second degree in the criminal court today on a charge of murdering Deputy Sheriff J. H. Keller, and was sentenced to the penitentiary for life. He had just been tried for murder in the had just been tried for murder in the second degree, the jury hanging.

I was still sitting lost in wonder when I was still sitting lost in wonder when I DIDLOMATIC BY DOY TELLET

The prince was still inaccently prattling of The prince was atil innocently partial things that meant the ruin or salvation of empires. Maubeuge from under his heavy eyebrows cast a dull and yet most anxious glance first at him, then at me. As he did so I noticed that his complexion turned to lead and the whole fashion of his face was altered. No doubt he had taken in the situa-tion at a glance, and knew that his villainy had been detected, for without a single word he turned around and withdrew, closing the door behind him.

I followed him at once. My anger was keen against him. I should have liked to take him by the throat and hand him over the Dial was genuine. To the initiated it to the police. But for the sake of my dear friend, the prince, I could not do this. He must never know what he had done. The knowledge that he had betrayed himself and the sovereign he loved so well would have overwhelmed him. In all probability he would never have recovered from the shock. It is for this reason that I have waited till his death before publishing this revelation.

So I reined in my anger as I went in pursuit of Maubeuge. I tollowed so swiftly on his heels that I caught him in the cor-"Monsieur Mauheuge," I said, "I must ask you to favor me with an interview."

He did not venture to decline the invitation, but followed me submissively into room belonging to the prince's suite of apart-There I came to the point at once

"Monsieur Maubeuge," I said, "I think it would be well for you to retire at once from the prince's service."

He was far too clever to bluster in a tete-a-tete. He knew that in my eyes he was irretrievably degraded, and there was no one else present whose opinion he could influence. So he took my remarks in a simple business-like fashion.

"I must give some excuse," he said.
"Is it not the case," I asked, suddenly remembering what Gresham had told me, "that your eyes are very bad, and that you have altogether lost the sight of your left eye?"

He looked greatly surprised, "It is true," he said, "but I did not know that any one knew it except myself."
"Well, that is excuse enough. Say that your eyes are so bad that you must at any sacrifice refign your position at once, At once—you understand me. On that condition I will refrain from communicating with the police. You will have to sacrifice a month's wages, but you will be able to afford that Besides, Monsieur Le Grand may find you employment. I recommend you not to remain in this country."

"I shall be pleased to carry out your wishes, sir," said the rascal suavely.
"That will do, then," I said. "You can go now. I hope that your eyesight may improve, and that your hearing may be dulled a little in the interests of honesty." He disappeared, and I never saw or heard f him again. If he is still alive, he passes probably under some assumed name.

As I have already said, the prince is alive and Le Grand is dead. I only refer to those who were mixed up in the affair and I am glad to have this opportunity of clearing up one of the most notable episodes in French history. (The end. "The Foundry Foreman," by J. H.

he extension from Onawa o Omaha this fall. Local representatives of the road are in no position to be informed as to the plans of the company and are, of course, as much at sea as other railroad men in the city as to what the intentions of the Illinois Central people are in regard to the extension. This much is certain. There is a large force of graders encamped at Onawa, Ia., and their numbers are being augmented almost daily. While nothing has been done by them, the men state that they are under contract and expect to begin work soon.

Contractors who have tried to employ men for other work have been unable to get a man from the number, and it is generally understood in the vicinity of Onawa that the force will be put at work in a few days and hat dirt will begin flying on the extension The question at present toward Omaha. seems to be whether the line will be built down the Iowa side to the East Omaha bridge, or on the Nebraska side, crossing at Onawa and reaching Omaha via Decatur, Tekamah and Blair. The grade is much better on the Nebraska than on the lowa side, and the road on this side of the river would pass through the best countles in the state and uch towns that are ready to do the right thing for additional railroad facilities. It is expected that definite announcement of the company's plans will be made in a short time. A meeting will be called within a few days for the purpose of forming a trans-

There was an affecting scene in the criminal court room yesterday when Richard Lewis, a boy not 18 years of age, was released from the county jail by Judge Scott after having served a third of the sentence that had been imposed. When Lewis was brought before the criminal judge the latter gave him some advice and warning. He said that he had no doubt of Lewis' guilt, but that he would be released because his family was a respectable one and because his sister had come before the court and pleaded for him. Then the judge proceeded to show him the evil of his ways and predicted that if he didn't stop he would some day find his way to the penitentiary. The prisoner did not take kindly to the idvice and manifested this in his manner and bearing as he was being lectured. Judge

Scott noticed this and excinimed: "Your heart is like flint and my words have no effect upon you. They tell me that you have never committed a crime be-fore, but I know that you will be before me again. No, don't tell me anything. I know because I have had experience with Echoes of a Bennington Trade Being The case of Charles Suhl against Egert Oft has come up for a second trial before Judge Keysor, it having been tried before at the February term of court, at which time the jury disagreed. The matter over which the suit arose excited considerable comment at the time it occurred. Oft was the owner of a harness shop in Bennington which he desired to dispose of. He found a would-be purchaser in the person of Suhl and he alleges that he made a bar-gain with him. Suhl took charge and Oft went into his employ. Some time after Suhl disappeared and Oft took hold of the business. When Suhl returned he alleges that Oft refused to yield possession of the property, and he at once began suit against him for $3,500 for unlawful detention. Oft fought the suit on the grounds that the property really belonged to him because he

These three claimants have filed cross petitions in the district court asking that the property of the company be placed in the hands of a receiver in order that the creditors may be satisfied.

The case of Charles Edgerton, a former justice of the peace, has finally been called for trial, a jury having been empaneled yesterday morning. Edgerion has been in attendance at the court every morning for the last week expecting that his case would be called for trial.
