END OF THE WAR IN SIGHT.

Railroads Will Call Off Their Low Rates on Eastern and West.

Omaha railroad men are more than pleased over the news from Chicago that the executives of the western roads have decided to enter into a pool on both freight and passenger business and that rates will be restored at once. They assert that the pool system is the most satisfactory system in the world to work under, and it seems to be the only way in which rates may be maintained in the west.

Official notice of the pooling agreement has not been received yet, but it is expected that the order to restore rates will be made at once, pending the completion of the details of the pooling agreement.

PREPARING FOR REGISTRATION.

Furniture and Supplies Being Sent to the Booths.

City Clerk High is completing arrangements to stock up the election booths preparatory to the first day of registration, which will occur October 17. The registration books have been completed and are stacked up in the city hall ready to be sent out early next Thursday morning. There are three of them for each precinct, or 228 in all.

Teams are busy hauling the furniture to the booths. A good deal of it was delivered before the primaries and the rest will be in the first of the week. A person who based his judgment on the scanty furniture of a single booth would scarcely be prepared to realize what a mountain of chairs, tables, stoves and smaller articles are stacked up in the basement of the city hall during the interval between elections. There are eight hundred booths in all and the grand total of furniture comprises seventy-six stoves and as many coal boxes, 152 tables, 522 chairs, to say nothing of the vast amount of stationery, books, coal and other supplies which must be distributed. In former years a good deal of the coal was stolen from the booths during the intervals between days of registration, but this year the council has provided against this by providing each booth with a substantial coal box, which will be tightly locked.

Joseph Harris and Elias Corey were admitted to the Soldiers and Sailors home.

Wanted

In that big Rochester, N. Y., fire, which every reader of newspapers must be familiar with, in which six of the largest manufacturers were more or less damaged, the insured and the fire underwriters could not agree, therefore, the goods were turned over to the Salvage Wrecking company, and it decided to remove the bulk, consisting of the least damaged goods, to Omaha, Neb., where the building, 115 South Sixteenth street, near Douglas, opposite Boston store, has been leased for a short time. This sale positively opens Thursday, October 17, at 10 a. m. No goods sold and no one to be seen until before. It will pay you to come hundreds of miles to attend this sale. Choice of men's black worsted suits or heavy men's Union cast suits, $2.99. Under one of these suits can be kept home for five days, and if returned unsold, money will be cheerfully refunded. Men's heavy natural wool underwear, 17c. Genuine Rhode Island made, with buttons, with velvet collars, and well lined, $2.65. This garment can be taken home and kept for five days, and if returned unsold money will be refunded. A pair of genuine dog wool socks go at 5c a pair. It is sufficient to say that this stock consists entirely of the finer grades of men's and boys' clothing, such as satin-lined suits, real fine ulsters and fine overcoats, as well as pants. Remember the day is Saturday, Thursday, October 17, at 9:45 in the morning, at 115 South Sixteenth street, near Douglas, opposite the Boston store, Omaha, Neb. Look for the big sign, "Fire Sale of Clothing."

HE LECTURED THE PRISONERS.

Judge of the Criminal Court Made It Unpleasant for Evil Doers.

The prisoners who were up for sentence before Judge Scott yesterday were unfortunate.

Judge Scott had been very indignant ever since he heard that the other members of the bench had been called upon to judge his rulings. This indignation was not lessened yesterday when he knew that the judges were actually sitting on his rulings, and consequently he had very little of the milk of human kindness in his soul. As a result the prisoners who were before him received the most severe sentences.

The first prisoners before the bar were Charles Whitney and Harry Paxton, who were recently convicted of burglary. They were charged with having entered the residence of John M. Daugherty several weeks ago, and stealing property to the value of $1,200. They were arrested in Joliet, Ill., with a portion of the stolen goods in their possession, and brought to this city. Judge Scott sentenced Whitney to seven years in the penitentiary and Paxton to six. In sentencing the prisoners Judge Scott gave vent to the following remarks:

"Two years ago when I took this case I said that I would be a terror to lawbreakers, and I have tried to be one. Though as the length and breadth of the land from New York to San Francisco, criminals know that they will get no mercy from me. You have heard of the lawbreaker's tools in other criminal halls. Yet you came to this city and committed a crime here.

"I tell you that I cannot allow the citizens of Omaha to be preyed upon, especially as they are now overburdened with taxation. All property is so heavily taxed that it has to be protected by the courts and this court is going to do it. Therefore, I am going to sentence you as heavily as I can, not only as a lesson to you, but as a warning to criminals of every country, in order that they may know that they had better keep away from Omaha while I am on the bench."

When Judge Scott had concluded he looked at the two prisoners a moment and then suddenly said to Whitney:

"You have got the marks of the penitentiary on you. I can see the marks in your face. How long were you there?"

Whitney said he had never been in the penitentiary, but Scott stopped him.

"I know you have been in the penitentiary, although I do not know whether it has been for one year, or how long. I can see it in your face. I tell you you have the marks of a penitentiary on your face. Judge by your appearance and I know you have been in the penitentiary."

F. M. Martin, alias Elliott, a well known crookman, was once sentenced to the penitentiary because it was suspected that he was concerned in an attempted burglary and safe-blowing at Calhoun, received the full term, ten years, for having burgled tools in his possession. The jury had found him guilty, but recommended him to the leniency of the court. In sentencing him Judge Scott said that he could not remember the name of the man because he knew he was a bad man and ought to be in the penitentiary.

"I can tell from your face that you are a man of remarkable cunning and craft, and consequently you are the worst in your profession. If you were in the United States senate you would command attention. I am guided by the appearance of men and I can see just what you are. Such a man as you ought to be put in a safe place, and therefore I will give you the limit."

George Petty, who was convicted of making an assault upon Thomas Gallagher, received another full term, ninety days in the county jail at hard labor, and with four months' suspension, was charged with having gone to Gallagher's residence late at night and breaking in the door. They threw a number of bottles into the building, and one of them struck Gallagher. The assailants were charged with committing an assault with intent to do great bodily injury.

"I do not see how the jury convicted you of simple assault," said Judge Scott to Petty. "I instructed it to either find you guilty of assault with intent to do great bodily injury, or not guilty. You should have been found guilty, and if you had I can see just what you are. Such a man as you ought to be put in a safe place, and therefore I will give you the heaviest sentence I can."

Swan Berklund was sentenced to ninety days at hard labor for assaulting George Medlock, an old man who was staying at a boarding house. Berklund was charged with burglary, received thirty days on bread and water, and William Collins, for petty larceny, received the same.

Ed Petty, charged with burglary, failed to receive a sentence. Judge Scott told Petty that he saw some good in his face and did not see how he was a bad man. Petty is well known to the local police as a crook and a gambler.

Pat Ford, Jr., and F. J. Delron were arraigned on charges of robbery. They were together with a man named Gallagher, are alleged to have held up August Walter on the night of September 24 and taken $20.75 from him. They pleaded not guilty.

Minor Court Matters.

A motion for a new trial has been filed in the case of David Whitney and others against M. J. Schertz. A hearing motion has been filed in the case of the Nebraska Loan and Building association against Albert P. and Mary A. Houck.

Silas A. Holcomb, a member of the Board of Medical Examiners, has filed an answer to the suit that was brought against them by Philip Leiber, because they refused to grant him a physician's certificate. The examiners deny Leiber's allegations that he is incompetent to practice, that he is a medical graduate of Strasburg. Leiber claimed to have obtained a certificate from the university, but said that he had lost it in a shipwreck.

A jury has brought in a verdict for the defendants in the case brought by William E. Halsey against the estate of Catherine M. Tusler. Halsey is an attorney who sued for $7,500 fees for services which he alleged to have rendered Catherine Tusler several years ago. The defense was that the services were rendered while he was a partner of Attorney Stoddard, a relative of Mrs. Tusler, and that he agreed to do the work without remuneration. The case was argued by Attorney Halsey, whose wife is the principal heir of the estate. The trial lasted for a week.

TRANSFER OF ISH CASES

Question Must First Be Presented to Judge Scott.

BANC WILL NOT AT PRESENT INTERFERE

If Criminal Judge Overrules Motion for Change from His Docket the Other Judges Will Consider the Matter.

The entire bench of the district court, with the exception of Judge Scott, sitting in banc yesterday in Judge Ferguson's court room, refused to entertain the motion to transfer the Ish murder cases from the docket of Judge Scott to the docket of some other judge. The judges held that through courtesy the motion should first have been presented to Judge Scott.

This was the decision that the bench reached after considerable discussion and consideration. Judge Hopewell said that the bench would be willing to consider the motion if it were overruled by Judge Scott. He also said that while the judges would make no rulings on the question whether the affidavits which were offered in support of the motion were sufficient, they were of the opinion that they were not.

The decision was an evident surprise to the attorneys for Ish, by whom the motion had been filed. One of them at once arose and said that they had understood that they were to have been given an opportunity for arguments and that consequently that it was the unanimous opinion of the bench and affidavits. They had come prepared, however, to show by affidavits Judge Scott's prejudice against their clients. They had also been willing to hear counsel on the friendly terms with Judge Scott, which tended to show Judge Scott's prejudice. They thought they ought to be heard in an argument of facts.

The judges consulted together for a few minutes and then Judge Hopewell announced that it was the unanimous opinion of the bench that Judge Scott should have been first advised of the motion, and application should have been made to him. He said that the bench was willing to hear counsel on this question, but as the judges were convinced that this method of procedure should have been followed, they were not willing to entertain the argument on the question of facts incorporated in the affidavits. Moreover, he said that the judges, after considering the affidavits, did not think that the affidavits mentioned in the affidavits showed prejudice.

Attorney Hanson said that he had consulted with other attorneys and had come to the conclusion that it was not necessary to file the motion before Judge Scott. In fact he understood that in other cases transfers had been made from Judge Scott's docket without a motion to that effect being made before him. Moreover, he thought that if the motion had been presented to Judge Scott and had been overruled, the only remedy was an appeal to the supreme court, as the district judges could not overrule a ruling made by one of their associates. Attorney Bradley continued the argument. He said that the motion had been filed with the intention of bringing it before the entire bench, Judge Scott included. Such being the intent, Judge Scott was given an opportunity to rule on the motion.

Judge Hopewell, however, held that it would be unfair for the judges to take a case from Judge Scott's docket before a motion had been filed before him. He said, though, that the judges of the district court had the power to take the case from Judge Scott if he overruled the motion, provided a proper showing was made. It was true that the supreme court only could overrule the ruling of the district judge on questions of law, but this was not a question of that kind. The judges assigned the dockets for the term and the district judge is transferring them. Judge Hopewell reiterated the statement that the judges would not consider the motion until it had been presented to Judge Scott.

In the course of the argument the attorneys raised the point that Judge Scott had temporarily set the Ish case for trial on Monday. The attorneys at once signified their intention of bringing the motion before Judge Scott with the affidavits which they had already filed and others which had since been obtained. It was the intention of bringing the motion for hearing before Scott in the afternoon, but this could not be done, as Scott had adjourned his court until Monday morning.
