Cotton.

Cotton was found growing wild in certain parts of America in 1492. It was first shipped from this country to Europe in 1784, a shipment of only eight bales. The annual shipment is now over nine million bales. As many Orchard Homes buyers on their visit there saw large fields of cotton ready for picking, some data in regard to it may interest them. Cotton planting is in April. It is picked from October 1 till Christmas.

Most people living outside of cotton districts think that the value of the cotton plant is in the lint, whereas there are several other very valuable products from this southern "king."

As the cotton is picked it takes 300 pounds to make 100 pounds of lint—one-third lint and two-thirds seed.

The seed is worth $10 per ton at the gin. It is used for feed by planters to some extent, but is mostly sold to oil mills.

After the lint is separated from the seed by a machine process called ginning, the seed is ground and cooked by steam; then the oil is pressed out, the yield being about forty gallons to a ton of seed.

The oil cake that is left after the oil is pressed out, is ground and sold as "cotton seed meal." About one-fourth of this meal is used as a fertilizer and three-fourths for feed. Much of it is sent north or exported. A ton of seed yields 700 pounds of meal. About 1,000 pounds of hulls are left from each ton of seed. Part of these hulls are used for fuel in running the oil mills and the balance sold for cattle feed. Linen paper is made from cotton dust, and cotton hull ashes are sold at $21.00 a ton at the mill, for fertilizer.

Each bale of cotton contains fifteen pounds of motes, which, until recently, were considered of no value whatever. A machine has recently been invented for ginning motes which gives them a market value. As there was from 100,000,000 to 150,000,000 pounds of these motes produced with last year's cotton crop, it will be seen that such an immense quantity, if carefully and persistently saved will add very largely to the total income from the cotton crop.

Cotton is ginned at so much per bale, the price varying at different points and under different conditions. The average price is $2.50 to $3.00 per bale.

The weight of a bale of cotton is from 400 to 600 pounds, the average being less than 500 pounds. The seed is usually taken as a part or full payment for the ginning, cost of bagging hoops, etc., or returned to planter.

See Orchard Homes, its land, location and advantages. All eyes are on the south and its development goes steadily on. Geo. W. Ames, general agent, 1617 Farnam street, Omaha, Neb.

Mr. O'Neil Was Said to Be Incurable.

Mr. Thomas O'Neil, fireman at Sailors' Snug Harbor, Staten Island, says: "Last fall I was laid up with sciatic rheumatism. I was treated by four doctors with every remedy known to medical science, even electricity, but they finally gave me up, saying my leg would always be paralyzed. At this time I was urged to try Munyon's Rheumatism Cure. It's effect was wonderful. I found entire relief from pain after a few doses, and, by continuing the pellets, was completely cured."

Specific for Each Disease.

Professor Munyon puts up a separate remedy for every disease. His Rheumatism Cure never fails to relieve rheumatism in from one to three hours, and cures in a few days. His Catarrh Cure is guaranteed to cure catarrh, healing the afflicted parts and restoring them to health. His dyspepsia Cure speedily cures all forms of stomach trouble. His Cold Cure never fails to cure the most severe cold in a few hours. The Munyon Remedies are sold at all druggists, mostly at 25 cents a bottle.

Personal letters to Professor Munyon, 1505 Arch street, Philadelphia, Pa., answered with free medical advice for any disease.

THE NEVILLE AFFAIR.

BY FRANK H. MARK.

(Copyrighted, 1895, by Irving Bacheller.)

CHAPTER II.

"It was the second day after that the doctors finally agreed death had been caused by a severe spasm, similar to that which had killed Mrs. Neville; and that the scratch upon his hand, although it had the appearance of being an irritating one, was insufficient to cause death. And so, you see, that is the reason the superintendent's undeveloped murder theory was dropped.

"Barton first gave voice to my suspicions by saying that the hand looked as if it had been poisoned; and that the doctors had at first thought the same. Barton, who had at one time served in the army, doing duty in India, said that both the doctor and his wife looked to him as many of the victims of snake bites whom he had seen out there. So he, Duroch and myself secretly set to work investigating.

"Close inquiry revealed many minor facts unknown to us; such as the door being unfastened when the servants returned and found Mrs. Neville dead, or dying. Another bit of evidence was the visit of a suspicious looking foreigner, who had called to see the doctor the day before his death, but had not found him at home. This same man, the housekeeper remembered, had passed them in the street a few blocks from the house, as they returned from the theater, the night of Mrs. Neville's death. We found, further, that since the doctor's death this same stranger had been in a hospital sick with fever; where, in his delirium, he talked of revenge on 'Ralph' somebody, and on 'Alice;' but, having recovered before we traced him there, he had been discharged, and so was lost to us for the time being.

"Barton and Duroch, who have been hunting this man ever since, have at last found him, and—"

My friend lifted his head and listened for a moment. Then he said:

"That carriage, which has just stopped, must contain Duroch and his prisoner."

And so it proved. The door soon opened and Barton and Duroch entered, and between them walked the prisoner, with manacles upon his wrists. He was a tall man, six feet if an inch, with broad shoulders, which looked curiously out of place on his wasted frame. His limbs seemed too weak to carry him, and he leaned heavily upon the arms of his conductors. His clothing, once of fine material, was worn and shabby, and hung loosely upon him. His face was one not soon forgotten, it being dark and swarthy, as one accustomed to all sorts of weather, and to tropical suns. The cheeks were sunken and gave to the cheek bones a prominence they were not wont to have; his eyes were dark, and the heavy black eyebrows gave them a severe appearance. From beneath his slouched hat could be seen straggling dark locks of hair that matched his eyebrows.

And between them walked the prisoner.

Upon entering the room he was seized with a violent fit of coughing, which left him weaker than before. As he dropped into a chair he asked for a little brandy, and my friend brought a bottle and poured some for him. He drank this, and seemed to gain strength. Then, in a low voice, he said:

"I know that you suspect me of causing the death of Dr. Neville; and I also know you have no proof that I did, and that you are working this case hypothetically. But as I have only a short time to live—consumption has me in its clutches, and my late fever has strengthened its hold—I may as well tell you my story, and thereby save you a great deal of trouble. So if you will pour me another glass of that brandy, I will begin."

This was the story that he told:

"The sun shone brightly on that beautiful May day twenty-five years ago when, in the little town of R—, in Illinois, the wedding bells rang as Robert Hart and his fair young bride went from the village church to their future home. She was the belle of the village, who, having just passed her 19th birthday, had linked her future—for better or for worse—to that of Robert Hart.

"Some of the village gossips shook their heads and said: 'She would be sorry that she had married him, for he was not the one to settle down very long and attend to domestic duties.' When he left school had he not thrown away his father's offer to study medicine under him and succeed to his practice when he was no longer able to attend to it himself? And did he not start out for those wild lands in the west, which were overrun with ruffians and desperadoes, whose chief pleasures were gambling and murder? He had stayed out there five years, and no knowing how many crimes might be laid at his door, for he was always reckless and daring. Probably the wealth he had brought home with him when he came a year ago and which he said was the price he had received for his gold mines, might have belonged to some wealthy speculator whom he had murdered.'

"But for all this talk of the gossips, Robert and his wife lived together two happy years, with no darkening cloud on their horizon, when his health began to fail. The hardships and exposures to which he had been subjected while in the gold fields and among the mountains had at last begun to tell on him.

"That winter he spent most of his time in bed, with his patient and faithful wife to nurse him, and it was trying on her, who had been accustomed only to pleasures and gay society, to be obliged to stay close at home and wait on a grumbling sick man, whom none could please. And so he lingered through the winter until warm weather came again, when he was able to sit up more and take short walks by leaning on his wife's shoulder, and finally to walk short distances by himself.

"The doctor then told him that if he wished to pass through another winter he had better take an ocean voyage and visit some tropical country for a couple of years. So it was decided that he should try the ocean and the tropics.

"The day soon came when, with his lu
