LEFT TO MEMORY'S FAVORS

All Evidence of the Columbian Fair Almost Obliterated.

TRANSFORMATION OF JACKSON PARK

But Two Features Left to Recall the Wonders of '93—Also a Few Bills in Which the State of Nebraska Figures.

Few of the millions who visited the World's fair and mapped its manifold beauties and wonders on memory's pages could be induced to visit the scenes of those splendors in the two years that have passed since their close. "If you treasure the memory of the fair, do not visit Jackson park," was the general warning, and it was heeded. The wreck of the "Dream City," the havoc wrought by fire, graphically told in dispatches from time to time, checked every desire to mingle ruins with the charms of the real.

The transformation of Jackson park is now well advanced, and within a short time it will be possible to go over the ground from which nearly every vestige of the fair has been removed, and recall amid agreeable surroundings the joyous days of jostling multitudes and mental satiety.

The work of reconstruction now under way, as detailed by the Chicago Tribune, will obliterate the geography of the fair, and but a few of its architectural beauties will remain. Behind the salvage company, which is gleaning from the ruins, is the massed force of 500 men writing change on the whole face of the grounds. Walks and drives and avenues are uprooted to the depth of the macadam, and black soil is heaped and rolled and smoothed everywhere. Along Stony Island avenue on the west a long ridge, gently curving in places, will hide the view of cable cars and saloons. A shady drive will run its entire length from Fifty-fifth to Sixty-seventh street. Another drive will follow the esplanade along the lake shore to the statue of the republic, where it will turn across the park to the Midway entrance. At the north inlet to the lagoons it will cross on a magnificent new bridge now under construction. This bridge will cost $40,000.

From the turn the shore drive will continue southward to cross the Grand basin, where the peristyle stood. Here the basin will be filled and the drive will be extended on south to the Sixty-seventh street limits of the park. Thence the roadway turns west again to connect with the drive paralleling Stony Island avenue. All these drives will be of macadam, rolled smooth. In effect they will suggest a chain of three gigantic circles, the first of which, all complete, encompasses the Field Columbian museum and other prominent buildings in the north end of the park.

There will be important changes made in the lagoons. Dredges are now at work deepening them and changing the shore lines. Sand and mud fished from them are utilized in leveling the ground. A long, sinuous elevation will be made close to the western rim of the main lagoon, providing a view point in all directions. The straight shore lines will be cut into graceful curves, and the shallows and the low banks on all sides will be set profusely with indigenous water plants. At the southern end of the lagoons a belvidere, or tower, will be built for observation purposes. From it there will be an unbroken view of the lagoons stretching away a full mile to the north. A similar vista will open to the south from the steps of the museum. At La Rabida convent, in the sheltered haven behind its rocky promontory, a yacht harbor will be dredged. Piling will be pulled up and a roomy anchorage will be provided for sailing craft. To the north, near the battleship, another and smaller harbor will be made for rowboats. Fifty rowboats and electric launches will be maintained there by the park board.

On the wooded island there will be frequent landing places, and at the north end of the island there will be a large boathouse. On the north shore of the south inlet, near the shore end of the old moveable sidewalk, a casino and rest will be built.

In the general plan of Jackson park particular attention is to be paid to grounds for out-of-door sports. The bicycler will be at home in the park. Twelve buildings will be at his disposal as places of rest or as shelter for wheels where they may be checked. There will be three racing courses for wheelmen, one of these a mile long and the others a quarter of a mile each. The mile course will be in a specially prepared drive around a grass plot in the southwestern portion of the grounds. The quarter mile stretches, one for men and one for women, will circle the open air gymnasium situated near Stony Island avenue and Fifty-seventh street. Provision for all sorts of games and contests will be made. One of them will be fitted up for women, one for men and a third—smaller, but no less complete—will be arranged for the children. A great bathing pavilion, complete in every respect, will be built out from the north inlet of the lake.

On the site of the old Manufactures building there will be stretches of level lawn, with tennis courts, baze ball fields and grounds for foot ball. This is to be the great gathering ground for players and spectators. A music court, with a pavilion, will be built on the site of the Fisheries building. Seats will be scrolled and shaded with trees and shrubs, and behind the court there will be hitching places for teams and a check stand for bicycles.

Except for marginal lines there will be few changes in the wooded island. With one exception the Japanese buildings will be left standing. All around them the trees have grown till their green branches seem grasping in a friendly way at the quaint eaves, almost hiding the picturesque buildings from sight. At the north end of the island a bridge will connect with the main land. Far to the south of the park a hill will be thrown up. It will be named "Concourse," and will furnish a magnificent view of the lake, the park, and the surrounding city. At the southeastern end of the park there will be a main entrance way. This entrance is provided with reference to the shore drive, the design of which is to some day connect with the lake shore drive, ten miles or more to the north. Eighty acres of Jackson park's 500 acres are complete. These acres, carpeted by young and tender grasses, lie to the north of Fifty-ninth street, and out of them rise the beautiful outlines of the Columbian museum and the high, red gables of the German building. The German building will be permanently retained and eventually it will be turned into a refectory. The great geographical globe made for the government exhibit at a cost of $12,000 has been suspended in the cathedral end of this building. It is so placed that excellent opportunity is given for studying it from all sides. Close against the shore lines are the squat outlines of the old park pavilion, around which Iowa made its state display. La Rabida convent, gray as with age and still the most picturesque feature of the park, still stands. But it is doomed. When the landscape gardener has worked southward it will be razed to the ground. It is now boarded up, the home of the bat and of creeping things of the earth. The Midway has undergone the greatest metamorphosis. It is now a magnificent boulevard one mile long and 600 feet wide, with three driveways lined with trees. The Grand Central canal along this thoroughfare is now about six feet deep, level as a floor, and with sides and bottom covered with a thick growth of smoothly mown blue grass. The introduction of water into this canal will not follow for several years, perhaps, and before water is turned in it will be made thirteen feet deeper and 100 feet wide at the water line. When complete it will have cost $500,000.

Few people in Chicago appreciate the gigantic work that is still racking and rending Jackson park. The Columbian Exposition Salvage company has already accomplished more than the task of a Hercules in stripping the main buildings to foundations. But where this company's work ends there begins a bigger task for the 500 men of the park commission. Every bit of foundation material must be taken up by the park builders. The great piles which were everywhere driven for foundations are pulled up. The Ferris wheel, especially, was a giant's task. In removing these piles an iron pipe is driven down alongside of the timber for the full length of the stick. Water is forced into the pipe, and, rising around the timber, softens the dirt until a machine for the purpose lifts it from the depths. It has cost on an average $1 apiece to pull these timbers, and when they are sunk in clay it often requires an hour's work to raise one. There are those who thought when the world's fair organization gave the main buildings to the park commission and paid it $100,000 in cash the South Park board was in luck. Then when the board sold the buildings to the Salvage company for $60,000 it looked more than ever a bargain. And yet it will cost the South Park board more than the $160,000 to get the grounds in order for filling. One of the principal reasons for this is the heavy cost for removing foundations; another is the vast amount of rubbish left because of the fire; another and most interesting is the fact that various states and countries having buildings on the grounds failed to fulfill contracts regarding the removal of foundations and rubbish. This last item forms an interesting after chapter to the exposition. In clearing up from these buildings the park builders have kept rigid account of expenditures. Bills have been made out and forwarded through Daniel Burnham of the Exposition company, but not a single delinquent has so far paid the slightest attention to the demand. The list of states includes:

New York	$64.4"	Utah	$9.56
Massachusetts	176.55	West Virginia	47.50
Iowa	469.5"	New Mexico	46.00
New Hampshire	50.15	Kentucky	46.00
Vermont	50.10	Arkansas	107.23
Maryland	104.00	Nebraska	93.83
Pennsylvania	11.30	Minnesota	115.00
Florida	125.70	North Dakota	60.85
Missouri	169.45	South Dakota	79.25
Louisiana	53.60	Kansas	93.59
Michigan	166.70
Colorado	150.90	Total	$3,239.85
Montana	97.35

Foreign countries which have dodged these little bills are:

France	$ 253.40
East India	84.16
New South Wales	77.60
Spain	226.05
Costa Rica	109.95
Guatemala	273.35
Brazil	317.90
Total	$1,354.35

Altogether there is the snug sum of $4,594.20 which the park board is out of pocket, with small hopes of recovering.

For clearing the eighty acres north of Fifty-ninth street the park board has paid $25,000 more than its proportion of the $160,000 received in cash. This expenditure is out of all proportion to the figures contemplated by the board. It is now estimated that $175,000 will be spent on the park in removing foundations—$15,000 more than the full amount received from the World's fair.

There was another loss to the park board, so considered, at least. In receiving the park from the exposition the water pipes and sewers were figured as of great value to the park board. By some chance, however, the water pipes were all sold to Thomas Kelly & Co., which concern dug the tubing and appropriated it to its own uses. To make this good the park board is laying its water pipes, planned with reference to one day connecting with its own pumping station, which shall supply the whole South side park system and boulevards. Just now the board is paying for city water. The sewer system used by the exposition company was found to be worthless because of its intricacy. It will have to be rebuilt. There were thousands of connections made with the old system, leading from surface drains, water fountains and closets, and to use the sewers would have necessitated digging down and bricking off those connections. There was a network, too, of air pipes and gas pipes everywhere. When complete the park will have between eight and ten miles of sewers and about six miles of water pipes. There will be fifteen miles of electric light conduits, five miles of which are now in. Power for these lights is generated in the Washington park plant, which is one of the finest in the country. This plant was the first to lay its wires wholly underground. In Jackson park it will furnish lights to 200 arc lamps.

There is a beautiful system in all this work. In the beginning the whole park was surveyed into squares of 100 feet. A chart was made of this, numbering the lines in one way and lettering them in another, until "5 W," for instance, meant an exact location to be determined to a dot. Every five squares there are some monuments planted with all the care and exactness of the surveyor. By this system the underground network of pipes, sewers and wires is known to a nicety.

Before the work of filling an "earthwork balance" was struck, determining the amount of earth to come from the lagoons and fixing the amount necessary to complete the topography of the park as planned. A system of earth tramways was constructed, with rolling stock consisting of short, dumpy cars holding one and a half cubic yards of earth. Seven hundred carloads of dirt are handled every day as the material is lifted from the lagoons by the dredges. This material is obtained at a cost of 20 cents a yard.

Over this filling material a black loam is spread in thickness varying according to the vegetation which is to be planted. This earth comes from the drainage canal, and, according to contract, it must be lifted from a clay subsoil. It is a costly dressing, and for the 70,000 cubic yards spread in the Midway the park board paid $63,000. In the park, north of Fifty-ninth street, $32,000 worth was spread over eighty acres. At this rate $224,000 worth of black dirt will be required to cover the 560 acres of Jackson park. In addition to this earth eighty teams haul manure from the stock yards all the winter long, spreading it over the sown surface of the park. In the summer those teams haul sprinkling carts for the South Side park system. A nursery will be attended in the south end of the park for several years yet. It is designed to set out 50,000 trees and shrubs between Sixtieth and Sixty-seventh streets and west of the lagoon, and many of these will be propagated in the park nursery.

So far the cost of this great work has been about $500,000. The Midway was improved at an expense of $200,000, the work at the north end of the park cost $100,000, and the north inlet bridge $40,000, miscellaneous improvements $145,000. It is estimated that another half million dollars will be necessary to complete the work in accordance with the plans, but it may be eight or ten years before the great pleasure ground is complete in every detail. The salvage company will turn over the grounds May 1, 1896, after which the progress of the work will depend largely upon the funds at the disposal of the South Park board. For the last season the force of 500 men has been divided, 200 men working at maintaining the completed grounds and at cleaning in advance of the work, while 300 men have been engaged in the construction of the sewerage and water systems and in landscape work.
