ST. PAUL'S NOTED PRELATE

An Outline of the Career of Archbishop John Ireland.

ACHIEVEMENTS IN WAR AND PEACE

An Army Chaplain, Colonizer, Temperance Promoter and Leader of Progressive Churches—A Battled Field Bishop.

Most Rev. John Ireland, the distinguished archbishop of the Roman Catholic diocese of St. Paul, will make his initial appearance before an Omaha audience next Thursday evening.

John Ireland bears the name of the land of his birth. He was born in County Kildare, September 11, 1828. He left the island with his parents when a child, bound for Chicago, and there spent his early boyhood.

ment, the rank and file of which were largely Catholic.

MADE A BRAVE ARMY CHAPLAIN. For the ensuing fifteen months the young priest shared the hardships of camp life and the dangers of military duties with the gallant fellows of the Fifth. An interesting sketch of his career at the front was related a few years ago by the late John Arkins, publisher of the Denver News.

One of the most desperate battles of the war in the west was that fought on the 4th day of October, 1862, between the combined forces of Generals Price and Van Dorn on the confederate side and the union forces under Rosecrans, at Corinth, Miss. It was a struggle which sent thousands of brave men to their death.

The determined assault of Van Dorn's army had been gallantly met and firmly withstood, except upon the right. There the rebels had succeeded in penetrating the lines, had captured the 9th regiment, and were pressing into the streets of Corinth. The situation was critical. Unless the enemy was turned back and that gap closed it would admit a column of Van Dorn's army to the town, and Rosecrans' lines would be taken in the rear, the consequences of which would not be otherwise than calamitous.

It was almost night before the last gun was fired in the series of charges, skirmishes, advances and retreats which characterized that battle. Father Ireland was missing. Where is our brave chaplain? went from one group of soldiers to another until he reached every soldier of the Fifth regiment.

advances and retreats which characterized that battle. Father Ireland was missing.

What he had done was now the general topic of conversation and the fear that he might be in those heaps of slain caused strong men to tremble.

Mr. Adkins' account of the archbishop's military service traveled abroad with the archbishop's visit to Europe two years ago. It was republished in the Paris Figaro on the morning of his arrival in Paris. It set all tongues in Paris wagging about the great American prelate who was already famous, even in Europe, and who was brought into prominence by this article in a new light as a military hero.

One of the first matters to engage Father Ireland's zeal was the colonization of Irish settlers in the west. He had seen with his own eyes the miseries of tenement life in the crowded eastern seaports, and he was desirous of bringing as many as possible of the Celtic race to the fertile and unoccupied lands of Minnesota and Dakota.

diocese, and when a 1875 Bishop Grace began to look about him for a coadjutor his glance naturally fell first on the indefatigable and zealous pastor of the cathedral.

Five years afterward Bishop Grace resigned this see to his younger colleague, an honor which was shortly to be followed by another, for in 1883 Bishop Ireland was raised to the dignity of an archbishop. The scene of the conferring of the pallium on him in the cathedral by his venerable predecessor was an impressive one.

His opposition to CAHENSLEYISM. Archbishop Ireland has long been one of the foremost of the country, looked up to on all occasions as the spokesman of the Catholic church. At the event which has perhaps, brought him most prominently before the American people as the representative of the American hierarchy is the vigorous opposition which he has steadfastly maintained to the scheme which aimed at dividing the Catholic church of this country into factiously appointed "national" bishops.

Colonization did not long satisfy the zeal of Father Ireland. He early displayed an energy, enthusiasm and nerve in the temperance movement that would have won for him the title of the Father Mathew of America. Tremendous as is the scope of the temperance societies of the Catholic church, Archbishop Ireland enters into a still wider field. He does not confine himself to preaching temperance from the pulpit, he is continually urging it from the lecture platform and in the public press, and he numbers among his warmest friends and devoted admirers members of the Women's Christian Temperance union (notably its president, Miss Willard) and many of the most prominent of the prohibition party.

SIGHTSEERS' VIEWS IN AN OLD CITY

Descriptive Letter from an American Traveler Taking in the Places of Interest in the Famous and Historic Mexican Capital.

The population of the City of Mexico is about 300,000, and of these at least two-thirds live literally in the streets. The high altitude, the mildness and dryness of the atmosphere, even in the depth of winter, and the almost constantly clear blue sky combine to make out-of-door life as attractive as may be found, perhaps, anywhere in the world.

The Paseo de la Reforma in the morning is almost empty of tourists, but by 5 o'clock one will see a struggling mass of vehicles. Dimly familiar landaus, quiet coupes, with jolly parties, flying steps, and dashing carriages, will fill it to overflowing, and till the afternoon the city is a madhouse of wheels.

of the silver metal at his boot heel to prove himself a veritable centaur. A well-knit figure, and a well-cut, well-bred face, in spite of its ludicrous air of grandeur, consequently greatness supposed to express truly the haughty Castilian spirit.

Groups of little folks are to be seen, too, solemn little morsels of humanity with big dark eyes, marching to and fro with their mothers, enjoying life with the subdued manner of octogenarians. Here, too, fair women, with prayer-book and rosary, steal discreetly by the invisible eye of a young man. And if you are of the dangerous sex, the old duenna will keep a watchful and observant eye on you, and cry out in her memory any look of admiration bestowed on her fair charge.

While the latest Paris gowns prevail among the Mexican ladies, the black lace mantilla still anticipates millinery confections. Conspicuous, no Spanish politician, in his memory any look of admiration bestowed on her fair charge. To prove to you that you should give a prolonged, admiring stare, followed by a look of vacuous surprise—quite overcome the outline of his face and looking like a man who has just been struck by lightning.

town's opera, in the Zoelzo. Here focus a number of prominent streets, and it is a spot more preoccupied with historic interest than any other part of the city.

There are baskets, boxes and cornucopia of tissue paper, wax figures of demure-looking virgins, a composition, tiled and of course, the wise men of the east, led by a conspicuous gilt star hung in an evergreen, a gipsy, side by side with bull fights and fun, and a series of pictures of life in the country, even to the patient loaded donkey standing at the gate.
