Fortunes in Treamre-Trove Secreted Throughout the Midsouth.

HIDING PLACES MAY NEVER BE DIVULGED

Lee's High Estimate of Mahone's Military Capacity-Had Selected Him as Successor in the Event of Meeting Death-Incidents.

For 100 years to come there will be tales of treasure trove from that large section of the midsouth which was for three years of civil war a debatable land, wherein, outside for the the army posts, there was no security of person or property. The invaders themselves had a pretty taste for looting, says the At lanta Constitution, but they were nothing like so rapacious as the guerillas, who plundered impartially men of all sympathies, and as often sported blue and brass as the confederate gray. The guerillas had, indeed, but a single active principle-pillage. One old farmer who had held three years' crops until prices were at their hignest, got $12,000 in the yellow metal, took it home and gave it t his wife, bidding her do the best she could with it. She was an easy-going, unthrifty sort of body and buried it in the garden in ister a roast to Judge Lewis, the latter being plain sight of everybody about the place, tak-no longer a judge in this district. The case ing only the precaution to set a straggling ing only the precaution to set a straggling rosebush on top of it, and, further, to put above the gold a bog of silver that she herself had saved up. That was Friday night. On Sunday the family all went to preaching. When they came home the rose tree lay uprooted, the bag of silver was gone, and s vere a wagon and team, besides a family of negroes.

They had taken all of their belonging and so much of their master's and run away to the nearest federal outpost, which was twenty miles off. Pursuit was useless and would have been foolish. The farmer eyed the rifle hole a minute, then thrust hi armdown into it, scratched about furiously clutched something deeper down and brough up the bag of gold. The despoilers, finding ! had not thought to dig deeper. But the hiding further. He was a godly man, but Sunday though it was, he swung the bag over his shoulder and tramped of into the wood. He did not come back until the night wa well on and said nothing of what he had done with the mon'y. He never said anything in fact. Six months later he was found dead in bed of hear: diseis; and though his heirs hunted high and low, have asked the help of the divining rod and consulted clairvoyants, to say nothing of having cleared up the whole woodland, and dug over the

1,000-acre farm, to this day they have never found a trace of the lost money. Another man buried a pot of gold in a rickety barn, then set fire to the structure, being certain that no one would think of rummaging in the ashes. And still another put $50,000 in gold and greenbacks in the earthen floor of his smoke house, and let stay there five years, not daring to take ! ut until recenstruction was pretty well ac emplished. One of his neighbors, the Priftiest man in the county, was known to have put a very large sum in the rock walls of his cellar, but to have grown distrustfui of that hiding place, and so to have chosen another. Where the other was located never came out, the man who chose it was secretive, and did not tell even his only son By and by he was stricken speechless and motionless at a time when he locked to be good for years of life. He did not live six months and throughout them he made der perate efforts to tell his secret, but all i valm. It is still a secret—except as to few thousand dollars, which his grandsor found twenty years after, under the rock pillars of an old corn crib. MAHONE AND HIS COW. At a dinner in Lexington, youn after th war, General Lee said that he had fixed upor Mahone as his successor in command of the confederate forces, "If I had been killed," Lee is reported to have said, "General Ma-hone would have succeeded me in command." er from J. Horace Lacey, reproduced in Ben Butler's autobiography. The truth of the statement has been questioned by General Mahone's enemies in Virginia, says the St. Louis Republic, but no one has ever pro-duced a reasonable denial, while every one, even the governst of his enemies. knowledged the high esterm in which Mahor

Mahone was a civil engineer by profes-sion. He brought into use in every engagement the skill be had gained in this calling at the Virginia Military institute, from which he had been graduated in 1847. He was an organizer of men. Those who fough by his side say he conducted himself in bat le just as if he were going about an im-portant plees of englueering. He was always calm and self-possessed, and the precision and deliberation which he employed were ever successful agencies in his career.

When he first entered the southern army he was an almost hopeless dyspeptic. He had suffered for many years the uncertain and untimely effects of that exasperating malady. He thought he should have fresh him all through the war. General Mahone often related the annoy ance the cow caused him. One time Genera Lee came in to him after the cow had been in the way and said: "General, you will have to leave that cow behind." "I cannot do it, sir," Mahone replied. "If we cannot get along with the cow I will have to resign.

at General Mahone's camp on the memorable April day when Lee surrendered to Grant at Appendatox. General Mahone took the animel home to Petersburg afterward.

The general was noted also in the army for the complete household outfit he carried. With cooking utensils he was particularly we'll supplied, and he afterward often boaster that he lived as well in the army as he lived in Washington. He had supplied his camp wagons with a full outfit of bedding and household contrivances, and though the was a perpetual "moving day" for him, he often said that if he had another war to go through he would do the same way.

Sergeant Henser has served as a soldie for almost nineteen years. He is a power fully built, athletic man of about 38 years o age, a pleasant conversationalist and a thor ough good fellow, so his comrades say. In the distinguished marksmen's team in 1892 he won the celebrated "Buffalo medal, a huge gold adornment sought afte more, perhaps, than any other insignium marksmanship to be found in the army. I is larger than the government's gold meda awarded to the winner of the army team shoot, and it has to be won from the most Ustinguished marksman in the service. cored 600 points in this shoot. In the sam competition in 1893, at Fort Sheridan, b again won the "Buffalo" medal, with a score of 582. Some one tampered with the sights of his carbine at this shoot, and after he commence to fire he had to take a new carbine, abou which he knew nothing. He found that i shot a trifle too high. He allowed for this and won first prize in spite of the machina-tions of his enemies. Again, in last year's shoot, he captured the greatly prized "Buffalo" medal, and now has three of them, is addition to the first prize medal of the gov ernment for the army, and less valuable decorations enough to cover his breast. He has made the highest scores in skirmist iring ever attained, namely, 170, 177 and 184, out of a possible 200 points.

The shooting at these various competition is not "still shooting" by any means. Neither are the distances from the targets known neither are the targets the great immens. square affairs at which the militia shoot at Creadmor. The targets are ellhouette figure of soldiers, life size. One is standing in the act of firing a rifle, another is kneeling, and the third is lying prone upon the ground with only shoulders in sight. A bit on th s'anding target counts three, a hit on the kneeling one four, and the lying figure counts five when hit. The men are given forty rounds of ammunition. They are rounds of ammunition. They are started toward the targets at a distance of 500 yards. They are commanded to halt at some point, the cance of which is known to them, between 500 yards and 200 yards from the targets They must fire one shot at each stop, and there are five halts each way, going and coming. The second shot is fired at an unknown distance further on, and the competi or may fire as many or as few as he like uring the thirty seconds' helt. He must es imate his distance, arrange his sights, allow imate his distance, arrange his sights, allow for windage, load his piece at each shot and respond promptly to the call to stop firing and advance to the next halt. Of course, the men are very expert in the handling of their earbines. They will drop to the ground like shot, with their fingers full of cartridges thirteen shots at the targets in thirty sec onds, and hit the targets every time. Ser geant Henser is thought to be a better sho today than he has ever been, and if he does not win the "Buffalo" again this year, some one will have to shoot very fast and very well to prevent him.
