CHAPTER XV. Jennie Brewster stood with her back to the door, a sweet smile on her face. "This is my day for acting, Miss Longworth. I think I did the role of housemaid so well that it deceived several members of this family. I am now giving an imitation of yourself in your thrilling drama, "All at Sea." Don't you think I do it most admirably?

"Yes," said Edith, sitting down again. "I wender yea did not adopt the stage as a

"I have often thought of doing so, but journalism is more exciting."
"Perhaps. Still it has its disappointments.
When I gave my thrilling drama as you call it, on shipboard, I had my stage accessories arranged to better advantage than you have

"Do you mean the putting off of the boat?" "No: I mean that the electric button was under my hand-it was impossible for you to ring for help. Now, while you hold the door, you cannot stop men from ringing, for the bell rope is here beside me."

"Yes, that is a disadvantage, I admit. Do you intend to ring, then, and have me turned

"I don't think that will be necessary. I imagine you will go quietly."

"You are a pretty clever girl, Miss Longworth. I wish I liked you, but I don't, so we won't waste valuable time deploring that fact. Have you no curiosity to hear what I was going to tell you?"

"Not the slightest; but there is one thing I should like to know."
"Oh, is there? Well, that's human, at any rate. What do you wish to know?"
"You came here well recommended. How did you know I wanted a housemaid, and were your testimonials—" Edith paused for a word, which Jennie promptly supplied. "Forged? Oh, dear no. There is no necessity for doing anything criminal in this country, if you have the money. I didn't forge them—I bought them. Didn't you write to any of the good ladies who stood sponsor for me?" 'Yes, and received most flattering accounts

'Certainly. That was part of the contract Oh, you can do anything with money in London; it is a most delightful town. Then, as for knowing there is a vacancy, that also was money. I bribed the other housemaid to

"I see. And what object had you in all this?"

Jennie Brewster laughed-the same silvery laugh that had charmed William an hour or two before—a laugh that sometimes haunted Wentworth's memory in the city. She left her sentinel-like position at the door and threw herself into a chair.

"Mies Longworth," she said, "you are not consistent. You first pretend that you have no curiosity to hear what I have to say, then you ask me exactly what I was going to tell you. Of course, you are dying to know why I am here; you wouldn't be a woman if you weren't. Now, I've changed my mind, and I don't intend to tell you. I will say, though, that my object in coming here was, first, to find out for myself how servants are treated. in this country. You see my sympathies are all with the women who work, and not with e women-well, like yourself, for instance."
Yes, I think you said that once before And how do we treat our servants?"

"It is most gratifying to hear you say this. I was afraid we might not have met your approval. And now, where shall I send you your month's money, Miss Brewster?" Jennie Brewster leaned back in her chair

"So far as my experience goes, very well her eyes all but closed, an angry light shooting from them that reminded Edith of her glance of hatred on board the steamship. A rich warm glow of color overspread her fair face, and her lips closed tightly. There was a moment's silence between them, and then Jennie's indignation passed away as quickly as it came. She laughed, with just a touch of restraint in her tone.

"You can say an insulting thing more calmly and sweetly than any one I ever met before; I envy you that. When I say any-thing low down and mean, I say it in anger, and my voice has a certain amount of scridity in it. I can't purr like a cat and scratch at the same time-I wish I could." "Is it an insult to offer you the money you have earned?" 'Yes, it is, and you knew it was when you You don't understand me a little bit."

"Is it necessary that I should?"
"I don't suppose you think it is." said Jennie, meditatively, resting her elbow on her knee, and her chin on her palm. "That is where our point of view differs. I like to know everything. It interests me to learn what people think and talk about, and somehow it dorsn't seem to matter to me who the people are, for I was even more interested in

"There is still time, said Edita, smiling in spite of herself. "Shall I ring for him?" "Please do not. I want to avoid a painful scene, because he is so sure of himself and never dreams of a refusal. It is such a pity, too, for the butler is my ideal of what a member of the aristocracy should be the directly is something awe inspiring.

Lord Frederick."

"Too bad!" cried Jennie, looking with wide "Too bad!" cried Jennie, looking with wide open eyes at the girl before her. "Why, bless you, I had a proposal from Lord Freddle two weeks before I ever saw the butter. I see you don't believe a word I say. I'll introduce you and tell him you don't believed he asked me to be Lady Freddie, if that's the title. He'll look sheepish, but he won't deny it. You see, when I found I was going to stay in England for a time I wrote to the editor of the Argus to get me a bunch of letters of introduction and send them.

over, as I wanted particularly to study the aristocracy. So he sent them, and, I assure you, I found it much more difficult to get into your servants' hall than I did into the halls of the nobility; besides, it costs less to mix with the upper ten." Edith sat in silence, looking with amazed interest at the young woman, who talked so rapidly that there was sometimes a difficulty in following what she said.

"No. Lord Freddie was not half so conde-scending as the butler, neither was his language so well chosen; but then, Freddie is very young. I am exceedingly disappointed with the aristocracy. They are not nearly so haughty as I imagined them to be. But what astenishes me in this country is the way you women spoil the men. You are much too good to them. You pet them and fawn on them, and naturally they get concelted. It is such a pity, too, for they are nice fellows, most of them. It is the same appropriate that and all everywhere I've been—servanta' hall and all.
Why, when you meet a young couple, of what you are pleased to call the lower classes, walking in the park, the man hangs down his head as he slouches along, but the girl looks defiantly at you, as much as to say, Tve got him. Bless him! What have you to say about it? While the man seems to be ashamed of himself, and evidently feels that he's been had. Now, a man should be made to understand that you're doing him One day when Kenyon

"I'm not going to write up your household, after ail."

When the new offices of the Canadian Mica Mining company, limited, were completed, Kenyon took charge of them. He was somewhat overpowered by their grandeur, and he thought that unnecessary expense had been incurred in the fittings, but as they were now in for it, he said nothing, although a shiver of fear ran over him when he thought of the possible failure of the scheme, leaving the rapidly accumulating debt hanging over him. He occupied a desk in one of the back rooms, while a clerk in the front office gave away prospectuses to all who called, and furnished useful knowledge to an inquiring public. Most of Kenyon's callers were newspaper canvassers who wanted advertisements, which John at that moment was unable to supply. An olly young man, whose cast of countenance indicated that he belonged to a shrewd, thrifty and moneymaking race, said he was commissioned by "I think you would find it would pay you ex-tremely well to take that half page."
"I am not questioning the fact at all. I am merely saying what I have said to every one else, that we are not ready to consider ad-"I am sorry we cannot come to an arrange-ment, Mr. Kenyon, very sorry, indeed," and saying this he took another proof sheet out of his pocket, which he handed to Kenyon. "If we cannot come to an understanding, the manager has determined to print this, instead of the article I retermined to worth. Kenyon opened his eyes and unfolded the paper. The heading was the same, but he had read only a rentence or two when he found that the Mica mine was one of the making race, said he was commissioned by the Financial Field to get particulars about the mine, and this information Kenyon readily supplied, feeling glad that no adver-tisement was asked for.

greatest swindles ever attempted on poor, old, innocent, financial London!
"Do you mean to say," cried John, looking up at him with his anger kindling, "that if I do not bribe you to the extent of 1300, besides Longworth was seldom at the new offices. He was busy seeing acquaintances who would giving you an unknown quantity of stock, you will publish this libel?" You are stantly cautioned his partners against being stantly cautioned his partners against being in too much of a hurry, and he amazed Weniworth by informing him that he had overcome the objections and secured the cooperation of Melville, who had reported so unfavorably about the mineral, thus showing that anything could be accomplished if you took your time over it. A Mr. King, also connected with the china works, had promised his assistance.

"I do not say it is a libel," said the young man, smoothly; "that would be a matter for the courts to decide. You might sue us for libel if you thought we had treated you hadly. I may say that has been tried several times, but with indifferent success."

"But do you mean to tell me that you intend to publish this article if I do not pay you the E300?"

"Yes; putting it crudely, that is exactly what I do mean."

The first meeting of proposed shareholders was set for Monday afternoon, and Longworth expressed his belief that the forming of the company would be accomplished be-eat favor when you give him a civil word. That's the proper state of mind to keep a man in, and then you can do what you like with him. I generally make him propose, go as to get it over before any real harm's done, and to give an artistic finish to the episode. After that you can be real good friends, and have a joily time. That's what I did with Lord Freddie. We all went up the river one day—two young men friends of Freddie's and two nice girls, a chaperon, and myself. Would you believe that those two girls proposed to tow us up stream, and the girls proposed to tow us up stream, and the young men actually allowed them to do so. I was steering, and it made me so angry I couldn't speak. Lord Freddie seemed to feel that it was necessary to keep up a conversation, but when I didn't reply to him, he calmly lit his pipe and began to smoke. The other two reclined with their hats over their eyes, and, I think, went to sleep. Meanwhile the two nice girls trudged along the bank together, pulling the rope. I would have sunk the boat if I could, but I didn't know how. Well, when we got to the place know how. Well, when we got to the place where we were to have tea, the young men where we were to have tea, the young men said it was jolly nice of the girls to tow them so far; then they went and sprawled under some trees, leaving the complacent girls to get tea ready. I couldn't stand it any longer. I went up to the three sprawlers under the tree, and, bidding them goodby, I started down the towpath. Lord Freddie sprang up and came running after me, asking where I was going. I told him I was going to walk back to London. He laughed and said I couldn't; it was fifty miles away. But when he saw I was in earnest, he became anxious to know what the matter was. But when he gaw I was in earnest, he became anxious to know what the matter was. "I told him I thought I had come out with three gentlemen, but, finding I was mistaken, I was going back. He got very red, and then I just gave him my opinion of him and his friends, coming out with three girls and paying no more attention to them than if they were three dolls. That settled things. Freddie apologized, and he said he would go back and shake the brutes up a bit, which, I suppose, he did, for the brutes were as nice as could be to us after that. When Freddie and I were towing the boat back he proposed, and I laughed at him. After a while he began to laugh, too, and so we had a splendid time. What a lovely little river the Thames is, isn't it? A nice, clean, little pocket river. I would like to buy it, and put it in our back yard in America, just to sit and look at. Now, here am I, chattering away as if I were paid for telliting instead of well look at the lock was look.

America, just to sit and look at. Now, here am I, chattering away as if I were paid for talking instead of writing. Why do you look at me so? Don't you believe what I tell you?"

"Yes, I believe all you say. What I can't understand is, why a bright girl like you should enter a house and—well—do what you have done here, for instance."

"Why shouldn't I? I am after accurate information. I get it in my own way. Your formation. I get it in my own way. Your writers here tell how the poor live, and that sort of thing. Then enter the houses of the poor quite unblushingly, and print their impressions of the poverty-stricken homes. Now, why should the rich man be exempt from a similar investigation?" "In either case it is the work of a spy." "Yes, but a spy is not a dishonorable person; at least he need not be. I saw a monument in Westminster Abbey to a man who was hanged as a spy. A spy must be brave; he must have nerve, caution and resource. He sometimes does more for his country than a whole resiment. Oh there are worse persons the resiment. a whole regiment. Oh, there are worse per sons than spies in the world." "I suppose there are, still-" "Yes, I know. It is easy for persons "Yes, I know. It is easy for persons with plenty of money to moralize on the short-comings of others. I'll tell you a secret, I'm writing a book, and if it's a success, then goodby to journalism. I don't like the spy business myself any too well; I'm afraid England is contaminating me, and if I stayed here a few years I might degenerate so far as to think your newspapers interesting. By the way, do you know Mr. Wentworth's address?"

Edith hesitated a moment, and at last an

"Will you give it to me? I think I ought to write him a note of apology for all the anxiety I caused him on board ship. You may not believe it, but I have actually had some twinges of conscience over that episode. I suppose that's why I partially forgive you for stopping the cablegram."

If any time between now and Sunday night you conclude to act otherwise, a wire to our office will hold things over until we have have had an opportunity of coming to an arrangement with you. If not, this atticle will be published on Monday morning. I wish you a very good afternoon, sir."

John said nothing, but watched his visitor out on the pavement, and then returned to the making of his report.

On Monday morning as he came in by

On Monday morning as he came in by train, his eye caught a flaming poster on one of the bill boards at the station. It was headed Financial Field, and the next line, in heavy black letters, was "The Mica Mining Swindle." Kenyon called a newsboy to him and bought a copy of the paper. There, in leaded type, was the article before him. It seemed, somehow, much more important on the printed page than it had looked in the

As he read it he noticed an air of truthful sincerity about the article that had escaped him during the brief glance he had given it on Friday. It went on to say that the Austrian Mining company had sunk a good deal of money in the mine, and that it had never paid a penny of dividends, that had never paid a penny of dividends—that they merely kept on the mine at a constant they merely kept on the mine at a constant to swindle some confiding investors—but that even their designs were as nothing compared to the barefaced attempt at swindling con-templated by John Kenyon. He caught his breath as he saw his own name in print. It was a shock for which he was not prepared, as he had not noticed it in the proof. Then he read on. It seemed that this man, Kenhe read on. It seemed that this man, Ken-yon, had secured the mine at something like f10,000, and was frying to shove it off on the unfortunate British public at the enormous increase of f200,000; but this nefarious at-tempt would doubtless be frustrated so long as there were papers of the integrity of the Financial Field that took the risk and ex-pense of making such an exposure as was here set forth. here get forth.

The article possessed a singular fascination for Kenyon. He read and re-read it in a dazed way, as if the statement referred to some other person, and he could not help feeling sorry for that person.

He still had the paper in his hand as he walked up the street, and he felt numbed and dazed, as if some one had struck him a blow. He was nearly run over in crossing one of the thoroughfares, and heard an outburst of profanity directed at him from a cab driver and a man on a bus; but he heeded driver and a man on a bus; but he heeded them not, walking through the crowd like one under a spell.

THE SMOOTH, OILY GENTLEMAN.

your butler's political opinion than I was in Lord Frederick Bingham's. They are both conservatives, but Lord Freddie seems shaky butler's political opinion than I was in in his views, for you can argue him down in five minutes, but the butler is as steadfast as a rock. I do admire that butler. I hope you will break the news of my departure gently to him, for he proposed to me, and he has not yet had his answer." "There is still time," said Edith, smiling what a member of the aristocracy should be. His dignity is something awe inspiring. while Lord Freddie is such a simple, good natured, every day young fellow, that if I imported him to the states I am sure no one would believe he was a real lord. With the butler it would be different," added Jennie, with a deep sigh.

"It is too bad that you cannot exchange the declaration of the butler for one from Lord Frederick."
