I believed him to be exactly the man to commit such a crime, and could hardly satisfy myself that he was not concerned in it unti I learned that he was in jail in a neighbor ing town in South Dakota at the time for running a liquor joint in violation of the law. I have seen in his room stacks of newspaper clippings a foot high containing accounts of murders all over the country. It frequently happened, where he could not get ufficiently thrilling accounts of such affair in the telegraph columns of the papers in his own town, that he would send long distances for local papers in which the matter was likely to be handled at greater length."
