Just because Germany is taking a hand in the Transvaal controversy is no reason why we should assume that the "Boers" have any intimate relationship with "beers."

And still the wonder grows that the same man could have been responsible for the rebel flag order and for the Venezuelan message so boldly upholding the Monroe doctrine.

The United States is at present engaged in the landable enterprise of demonstrating to Great Britain that Englishmen are not the only ones who can survey a national boundary line.

St. Louis is apparently of the opinion that the republican national conven tion, which it has already secured, ought to serve as a nest-egg to attract to it the conventions of all the other parties in addition.

Announcement of intentions from statesmen reputed to be ambitious to fill the governor's chair in Nebraska next year seem to be in order. Speak right out, gentlemen, without regard to the fact that this is leap year.

This time the creation of a new Pacific railroad commission is championed by Secretary Hoke Smith, with the tacit approval, if not the express endorsement, of President Cleveland. Secretary Smith's proposition is that congress should refer the whole subject of Pacific railroad debt settlement to a specially appointed commission and defer final action until it has digested and formulated a plan for congress to ratify.

The question which Secretary Smith's recommendation raises is, Can the Pacific railroad debt settlement be effected by congress any better after investigation by a commission than it can be at the present time? Is there anything to be gained by creating such a commission? Could the commission obtain any information that is not now at the dis posal of congress? Would the members of a specially appointed investigating body be less likely to be influenced by the railway magnates and their representatives than the members of the Pacific railroad committees of the two houses? Would the appointment of a commission stay the pending foreclosure proceedings under the first mortgage and would it improve or injure the posi-
