Finally Hascall took the floor. He mportunt enumerated the many municipal honors held citizens of the First ward, and declared that that was proof of its being the home He said that he never made application for the honor which he now held. The office sought the man. His friends osked permission to use his name as a can-didate, and he hadn't it in his heart to them the privilege. Then he narrated the many improvements he had secured for the First ward, and dwelt at great length on the magnificence of the Tenth street viawhich was secured almost solely through his efforts. Concerning the new depot question, he declared himself heartily in favor of a new depot to replace the present structure, but thought that it should be lodav On
