The Merritts agreed to buy three-fourths of the stock of the Empire Coal and Coke company for $450,000, of which $20,000 was paid in cash and the balance secured by notes. Later the Mer-ritts found that the Kentucky coal lands were not so extensive or so valuable as represented, and part of the notes were cancelled and the deal declared off. Stratton started a suit, which is now on trial, against R. H. Palmer, E. T. Mer-ritt and A. R. Merritt, to recover on some of the notes that were not cancelled. The defendants claim that the stock in the Empire company was not worth more than $5,000, and ask judgment for $35,000, the difference between the represented value of the land and its actual value. when the joint assembly convened in order to go through the formality of a ballot for United States senator.
