CHILD'S PATHETIC STORY

Mrs. T. L. Parks Aids a Little Danish Girl.

DRIVEN FROM HOME BY CRUEL PARENTS

Neola Authorities Instructed to Investigate the Case and Prosecute Those Responsible for the Inhuman Treatment.

The attention of the county authorities was called to a sad case yesterday. During the morning Mrs. T. L. Parks, whose home is in Dunlap, where she is in charge of County Auditor Matthews, accompanied by a little Danish girl, 15 years old, whom she desired to transfer to the care of the county authorities. She said the girl had come to her house in Dunlap several days ago in a truly pitiable condition, begging for permission to work for her board. The child was frail and sick and the woman took her in. It was some time before she could discover much about her. Little by little she learned that the child had run away from her home in Neola, Mo., and had walked across the country the entire distance to Dunlap. Pressed for fear of leaving her home the girl refused to talk about herself until she was threatened with being returned to her parents. Then she told a sad story of neglect and abuse.

Her own father was dead and her mother had married a man named Peterson. Other children had come and the child seemed to be in the way. Her stepfather was cruel to her and frequently whipped her. Her mother was equally unkind, and on the occasion of her last beating she was so severely injured that she was unable to get up. Her mother was equally unkind, and on the occasion of her last beating she was so severely injured that she was unable to get up.

Dr. Treynor was seen last evening and he thought it best to let the case go. The girl speaks but little English and she was difficult to get her to tell her story. She appeared to him to be suffering from a lack of nutrition and general debility from the effects of physical abuse.

The Neola authorities were advised of the case and directed to look up the parents. It is true Peterson and his wife will be vigorously prosecuted. They are said to be farmers, well fixed and amply able to provide for their children.

WILL TALK OVER THE DETAILS.

Some of the business men of the city who have been working for the benefit of the city are: W. H. Ware, J. J. Shea, I. F. Hendricks, and others.

PROTECTS INNOCENT PURCHASERS.

Suits Against Holders of Unearned Land Grants Dismissed.

Hon. Smith McPherson received telegraphic information from Washington last night that the bill for the purpose of protecting innocent purchasers of land under purchase from the railroad company, had been dismissed, so far as they were concerned, and that their anxiety and expense was all over. The government will still prosecute the suits against the railroad company, but whatever may be the outcome, the innocent purchasers of the disinterested lands will be protected by the government.

Cheaper Than Stealing Them.

W. H. Bradley, one of the active members of the Council Bluffs Business Men's association, is making these prices for today: 18 lb granulated sugar, 12c; 5 lb country eggs, per dozen, $1.00; Good country butter, 12c; 3-lb can apples, 12c; 3-lb cooking raisins, 10c; California dried grapes, 5c. If all business houses of Council Bluffs would quote such prices for sugar, flour, or all groceries there would be no excuse for Council Bluffs people going out of town to buy goods.

Celly Hough Bound Over.

The trial of Celly Hough reached a conclusion in Justice Cook's court yesterday afternoon, and the justice reached a conclusion at the same time, and that was that the best place for Hough at the present time is in the county jail. The better part of two days was spent in hearing the testimony of a score of witnesses on both sides. The state's witness told a simple story, forward story of the attack, which related the vigorous onslaughts of the attorney who was said for defending Hough. Some of the witnesses said the defense sent a little too far in trying to clear Hough, and sought to create the impression that Hough was the assailant, and that the blind Parlow and his cringing brother, who lived in Council Bluffs for thirty-eight years and were never in a court of justice, were considered dangerous highwaymen. The court made notes of the testimony and smiled.

The bond was reduced from $500 to $300, and it is probable that Hough will be able to get some responsible person to sign it. But if the bond is secured he will not get his liberty for a few days. Chief Canning has given instructions to officers to be on hand in such an event and take Hough in charge and permit him to serve out his unexpired sentence of twenty days in the city jail. Justice Cook has a simple story to tell whenever an acceptable bond is presented.

ATHLETES WERE NOT STRONG.

Four of the Field Club Unable to Hold a Captured Tramp.

Yesterday afternoon a complaint came to the police headquarters, that a tramp was making himself offensive and obnoxious to a number of families in the vicinity of the Council Bluffs Field club grounds. It was reported that the tramp had asked for food at a number of houses in the neighborhood and had been pitifully supplied at the beginning of his solicitations, but by the time he had been given a meal by half a dozen different women, the other women in the neighborhood who had seen him stowing away generous lunches at other back doors doubted his story that he had taken nothing for forty-eight hours, and refused him. He became angry and abusive and applied vile terms to some of them.

Chief James Irwin, in the neighborhood and caught the fellow without difficulty. He was only half a block from the Field club grounds, and he took the man inside of the clubhouse, and asked four of the athletic members of the club to accompany him there to hold him while he hitched up his horse and buggy. The request was complied with and the four young athletes attached themselves to the tramp, one on each arm and each leg. Canning had only gotten his horse half hitched to the police buggy when he heard a commotion inside the enclosure, and in the twinkling of an eye the tramp rose over the top of the eight-foot plank fence with Paul Aylesworth and a fellow athlete hanging to each leg. Before the tramp could come to the assistance of the tramp shook them off and disappeared over the fence. He ran in the direction of the Union Pacific yards with Canning in close pursuit. Canning was a better sprinter and had a gun, and he did not carry away any of the members of the Field club.

BROKE UP A HAPPY FAMILY.

J. H. Smith Makes Serious Charges Against His Father-in-Law.

As a money maker his methods were characterized by correct judgment, quiet strength and perseverance of purpose. Fortunately he usually was, but even when luck turned against him, as in the matter of the Boston-Constantinople railroad, he fought it out and won. In this matter three contractors drew lots for sections of the line, and Baron de Hirsch, who had been in the city for some time, bought the line while his colleagues both lost money. Even his racing, on which he spent great amounts, brought him in greater winnings, which he promptly turned over to the English hospitals.

ONE CAUSE FOR CHANGES OF VENUE.

It has often been remarked that the number of changes of venue in the district court is nearly as great as the number of cases brought. One of the justices, who is something of a philosopher and a reader of human character, says: "In a majority of the cases when an information is filed in a justice's court, and the commission of offense of the defendant is at once seized with the idea that that justice is a personal friend of the complainant and that he will not convict, and that he will be convicted, guilty or innocent. Self-preservation compels him to take a change to some other court, and he loses no time in taking the change. The justice explains more than half of the applications for change in state cases. It is not the practice of the court to inquire very deeply into the details of the case, but to get further than is necessary to establish the fact that an offense has been committed. It is human nature to be suspicious and the law gives the accused the right of being in a court where he believes there is a prejudice against him."

ALLISON'S MEN VERY CONFIDENT.

Information from inside sources indicates that the Men's Fraternity (M. F. S.) in Des Moines, May 5.—(Special Telegram.)—The Allison boomers are keeping the stiff kind of an upper lip, for the public at large at least. They claim that McKinley has but 243 votes and that he has no second choice votes to expect. G. B. Pray of the republican state central committee returned today from Chicago, where Allison will get a number of votes from Illinois and says: "The sober second thought of the St. Louis convention will make the nomination of Allison a foregone conclusion. The fight will be pushed to a finish and I believe Allison will win."

NO BOUNDS TO HIS CHARITIES.

Lavish and World-Wide Benevolence of the Late Baron de Hirsch.

AMBITIOUS THAT SHAPED HIS CAREER.

Sources of His Wealth—His Desire to Elevate the Lowly of His Race—Huge Sums Disbursed by the Famous Philanthropist.

Remarkable as the late Maurice de Gereuth, Baron de Hirsch, was as a money accumulator, and lavish as he was in his expenditures, it was not earning or spending that gave him his position in contemporary history, says the New York Sun, but his enormous and wide-scattered charities. No man in this age has given so much, so widely, or probably so wisely, in the cause of philanthropy as the son of the Jewish cattle merchant of Bavaria.

To his own people he gave most largely. Claiming neither the privileges nor the prejudices of Jewry, he still fostered the dream of one day seeing the Hebrew race restored to its old place. To this end he gave royally, yet lived to see his most cherished philanthropic schemes fail of success almost as signally as his financial schemes had achieved it. His efforts to make the poorest, most degraded and downtrodden, class of Jews in Europe self-supporting by giving them land and homes, were not only to his great disappointment, but also to his own race, were all the gifts made. Any worthy charity enlisted his sympathy, and his purse was never so worthy. To those of higher rank than himself he was a lavish lender who never gave a cent without interest, and he was the highest station in England, French nobles who blackballed him in their clubs, and every other class of men, he gave everything short of their souls in the presentation of notes for his signature, which he would not sign unless it carried with it a tenth part.

As a money maker his methods were characterized by correct judgment, quiet strength and perseverance of purpose. Fortunately he usually was, but even when luck turned against him, as in the matter of the Boston-Constantinople railroad, he fought it out and won. In this matter three contractors drew lots for sections of the line, and Baron de Hirsch, who had been in the city for some time, bought the line while his colleagues both lost money. Even his racing, on which he spent great amounts, brought him in greater winnings, which he promptly turned over to the English hospitals.

Personally, Baron de Hirsch was such a man as to arouse among his friends the warmest admiration, among his enemies the bitterest contempt. Probably there was some ground for both feelings. The weight of evidence goes to show that he was not a man of brilliant mental attainments. His judgment was a sterling judgment and a ready grasp of any situation in total and in detail. Literature and art had no strong attractions for him. He was a money-getter and a money-giver, a racing and sporting man for his pleasure, he presents even in his public life a strange mixture of qualities. What he lacked in mental attainments he made up for in his industry and energy. His admirers were mostly of his own race. His bitterest traducers were those whose schemes he planned self-destruction. Count Bary, who was the Austrian minister, and who was a bitter enemy of the Viennese anti-Semites to arouse national prejudice against him.

Perhaps no man of his time had so unquenchable a thirst for enemies. The evil eye was the least of the mysterious agencies for evil ascribed to him. Many persons—not all of the ignorant classes—believed that the evil eye of the finger and the evil eye of the hand were his specialties. He could bring down ruin upon whomsoever he wished to harm, and his breath was said to be poisonous, resulting in lunacy or slow death to those who were near him. Not were there writing proofs to those whose object it was to find them in the strange disasters that overtook many with whom he came in contact. Count Welfinger, the Austrian minister, was killed through the finger of the Viennese anti-Semites to arouse national prejudice against him.

At first every one laughed at the reports of his generosity. Then they wondered, and finally admired. To give an estimated value of his beneficent actions would be impossible at this time, but his greatest charitable scheme was the Jewish Colonization company, into which he put $10,000,000. One of these colonies, the one at Woodbine, N. J. "Ancher" was founded in the Argentine Republic, but proved a failure, and in general the scheme was unsuccessful. It was a bitter disappointment to him. He gave $2,000,000 to the Jews of Galicia for educational purposes, and offered five times that amount to Russia for the founding of schools, on condition that the distinction should be made in the matter of race or religion. This offer the Russian government refused, whereupon the baron, nothing daunted, sent $200,000 to the emperor for charitable purposes. It was perhaps, unconscious irony, this devoting the money to the education of Russian priests, who, as a class, afterward became leaders in the persecution of the Jews.

In all his gifts, designed to help his own race, De Hirsch's one object was not to establish the Jews above the other races, or even separate from them, but to give to them the same advantage and recognition as equals. Himself the most unorthodox of Jews, he would have gladly seen his co-religionists baptized if it would have mitigated the persecution of his race.

"There is an instance of what the persecution of slander can do," said De Hirsch bitterly, to his companion. "I would rather they had stoned me."

question and the topic of the hour in European society.

There was hardly anything in the famous philanthropist's appearance to support the theory that he was an active agency for evil, unless it were his eyes. These were large and bright, of a grayish green hue, and more peculiarly so under a rather retreating forehead. No other feature of his face was in any way remarkable. His mouth was rather wide, and overshadowed by a heavy mustache, his nose of generous size and broad, and his head shaped like a rather well. He was square shouldered, heavy built, and slow of movement. In no respect was he a striking figure. Of late years he had taken little exercise, and his death from apoplexy was as little a surprise as the lightning stroke of the disease which struck him.

But one could fairly have over the cradle of the infant Maurice de Gereuth in Munich sixty-three years ago; the one whose presence must have been peculiarly so under a rather retreating forehead. No other feature of his face was in any way remarkable. His mouth was rather wide, and overshadowed by a heavy mustache, his nose of generous size and broad, and his head shaped like a rather well. "Ah, your majesty," returned the cattle dealer, "my feelings have been with cattle as well as in cattle."

It was from his father that the boy inherited his business ability. At 13 years of age he went to school in Brussels, where he failed to distinguish himself in any way and was rather unhappy. Much better suited to his disposition was the place he got when he was 18 years old in the banking firm of Bischoffheim, Gotschall and Co. Already the habit of handling and manipulating gold possessed him. Steadily rising in the estimation of his firm he soon held a confidential position. He was a money-getter by marrying Miss Bischoffheim, a daughter of the senior member of the firm, who was also a Belgian life senator. In all the early part of his life he was a money-getter, and he was a money-giver. With unerring instinct he picked out what was best from the ruin of Dumoucau's bank, acquiring a Turkish railroad for Baron de Hirsch, a large mansion in Paris, and shooting boxes in Fiechhorn and St. Johann.

It was the desire of his life to establish himself in European society. He died with the desire unfulfilled.
