C. I. Filley Says McKinley Will Not Be Nominated on First Ballot.

ST. LOUIS, June 7 .- According to an interview with Chauncey I. Filley, the republican leader in Missouri, which appeared in the Post-Dispatch, William McKinley will not be nominated on the first ballot.

"Can McKinley he nominated on the ballot?" was asked Mr. Filley.

"Yes, but there is no purpose on the part of his friends and managers to attempt any such condition. Those who talk that way are not the friends of McKinley in the real sense of true friends. They are dently unfamiliar with the rules of publican national conventions, and evi courtesies due to every candidate and his right to have his name presented, voted upon, and to have the vote announced. "It would be the height of presumption, if not impudence, to attempt any other course. The friends of Reed, Allison, Morton and others, even in the minority, have their rights, and they will be respected. The rules of the convention, like others of the pist, will without doubt provide that while the roll is being called no change of vote will be in order, and that it will be an-nounced. Then, if a majority has not been had, another ballot will be proceeded with and so cn until there is a majority of all the delegates elected anounced.

"Hence no stampede or acclamation voto will be in order or possible. Without the contested southern votes, some 115 of which are McKinley's, it is impossible to nominate him on the first formal ballot. Sometimes an informal ballot is taken.
