was then most critical, and their commander hurriedly ordered his signal men to ask Colonel Plummer to lose no time in advancing with the main body to their rescue. While the signaling was in progress a hot and determined fight raged around the guns and several British officers and men fell. In the distance could be seen two more impls rushing forward to join in the attack upon Ecresford's position. Colonel Plummer ordered the main body of the British troops to advance. The mounted men wer sent forward at a gallop to storm the hills on the left of Beresford's position, from which the natives were delivering a hasty, dropping fire upon the kepje occupied by the British guns. The cavairy was gallantly led by Major Kershaw, who charged up to within fifteen yeards of the enemy's position when he was shot through the heart by a native, and almost immediately afterward fell, literally riddled with bullets. The advance of the main body of Plummer's forces was quickly noticed by the natives, who were pressing around the Bercsford detachment, and it caused them to take steps to retreat in order to escape being caught between three fires. The guns were thus able to do better exe cution, and a well-directed fire of case-shot followed by a well-placed fire of shrappel soon changed the native attack into a retreat, and when the full reinforcements can into action the enemy broke and fied. Th The guns and war rockets played upon the na-tives as long as they were in range, but the main loss of the enemy was inflicted while they were so bravely charging almo up to the muzzles of the British pieces. The bravery of the natives earned the admira-tion of the British, but their shooting was of the worst possible description

CAFTAIN SAVES THE GUN.

During the first rush upon the Beresfor kopje. Captain Llewellyn personally saved the Maxim gun by smart saber and revolver work. At one time he was completely alone natives having driven back the gunners and being almost in possession of the piece captain's determined stand, however enabled the British rush to regain the gun and he was helped out of his difficulties. The defeat of the natives will undoubtedly have considerable effect, as the impis de feated are among the best trained of the rebel forces. It is believed, however, that a further advance of the British forces must made, and another defeat inflicted upon natives before terms of peace will be considered by either side. A number of friendly natives, serving with the British, deserted to the enemy during the night. The engagement lasted about

General Garrington is understood to be preparing to drive the enemy eastward to ward the upper part of the country, where another fight may occur, before the effect of the uprising is finally broken.

shouts from without soon brought them to the platform. Mr. Bryan was escorted through the dense crowd to a platform improvised from two baggage trucks where he spoke briefly. Mr. Bryan's utterances were loudly cheered and the applause continued as he was hurried back into the train just as it pulled out. At Atlantic there boarded the train two reception committees, one from Stuart and the other from Des Moines. Stuart was reached at 8:15 and 4,000 people were in waiting with a brass band. A platform had been erected a few feet from the track. It was handsomely decorated and illum-inated. The crowd checred wildly as the train rolled in and continued the clamorous demonstrations until Mr. Bryan waved his hand for silence as a preliminary to the short speech which he made from the platform. Among those on the platform was General James B. Weaver, who was a mem-ber of the Des Moines reception commit-
