Clouds About to Be Lifted from the Social Circle,

GETTING READY TO OPEN THE SEASON

Crowning of the Queen of Quivera to Be the Social Event of the Near Fature_News and Gossip.

With the approach of autumn there is every indication that society is about to move from under the cloud that has hung shove the social horizon for the past few weeks of the heated spell. Of course but little was expected from society while the mercury was flirting in the vicinity of the top of the tube, but now that the conditions are becoming more favorable, the indications all point to a season of more than usual enjoyment and pleasure.

Most of the young men and women who have been at home during vacation are now preparing to return to their respective schools and colleges and during the next few days a number of important functions will occur at which they will be guests of honor. These will tide things over until the season opens in earnest. Already those people who have been away to the mountains and the watering places to escape the heat and discomfitures great city in midsummer are returning, and many of the houses that have been closed are again open and the hostesses are ready to receive their friends. As yet nothing of importance in the way of entertainments has been announced, still it is known that there is a full card ready for later dates in the season. There is a dearth of wed-ding announcements, but before the coming of the bolidays it is pretty certain that a number of the Omaha belles and beaux will be fatally hit by the darts of Cupid.

The opinion has always prevailed that so clety cared little for games that attract the attention of men. Observations made ing the past week, however, indicate society has taken hold of tennis with a nositio grip that it intends to hold. During the early days of the tennis tournament it was seldom that a woman was seen upon the grounds. As time wore on, members of the social set began to appear and then it was decreed that tennis was quite the thing. During the last days of the playing the grounds were crowded with young women. and from this time on the game will be

The social event of the coming season will be the annual ball, given in com-memoration of the coming of Ak-Sar-Ben II, King of Quivera, Duke of the Seven Cities of Cibola. This important event will occur on Friday evening, September 4, at the Castle, formerly known as the Den, on North Twentieth street. In honor of the event the Castle is being beautifully decorated with the royal colors of the king. carpets are being laid, divans are being located and the interior of the place is rapidly taking on the appearance of an oriental palace.

There is considerable curjosity to know who will be the king and who queen, but so far no person has been able to discover the identity of either

On the night of the grand ball, when the royal procession will enter the city, the masked knights will appear upon the ing floor at the castle and march before the king, who will review them from his throne of purple and gold. After this is over he will step from the throne and advance to where the maids of honor are seated, and from them he will select the one who will reign as queen of Quivera during the next twelve months. After the coronation ceremonics, the ball will begin and will be continued until an early hour the following morning.

AMUSEMENTS.

A simple, every-day succession of events and a series of pictures of New York life make up the ingredients employed by Ada Lee Bascom in her play, "A Bowery Girl." Yet there is so much that is realistic and genuine, so much that takes hold of the realties of life in a great city, that it ap-peals to every one. What country boy has not heard of New York, the metropolis of America, and who has not pictured in his mind the famous Bowery of that city, proba-bly the best known street in any city of the world, where all classes and characters con gregate? The play aims at once to be real-istic and melo-dramatic, with a mixture of
