The Board of Education held its regular meeting last night, and was honored by having the largest audience to listen to its mer meeting when the citizens met to confer with the members over the election of city superintendent. The drawing card last night was the election of a school treasurer There were numerous candidates and each candidate had numerous friends who were anxious to do all they could to help their friend. The fight has generally been regarded as a contest between the various city banks, each desiring to secure a treasurer who would keep the school funds on deposit in that bank.

Before going into the fight the board transacted its regular routine business. Chairman Fonda, from the committee on buildings, reported the boilers in the various buildings to be in a condition requiring frequent repairs, and stated that there was something in the water that seemed to eat into the metal in low-pressure boilers more rapidly than in high-pressure boilers. There was always danger of the boilers giving way, and he submitted a proposition from an insurance company offering to a year. He recommended the adoption of tary at $200 a year and that of the treasurer at nothing. Each was required to file the same amount of bond as last year. The board took up the question of furnishing school books to indigent pupils. Instructions were given to the principles of all schools to immediately report to the superintendent all cases coming under their observation, and the superintendent was instructed to draw an order for the books required after proper investigation of the cases reported. The board adjourned to meet again in special session for the pur-pose of approving the bonds of the secretary and treasurer.

PROGRESS OF THE CARROLL CASE.

Medical Experts Take Up Most of the Day and Arguments the Rest. Four or five doctors and as many lawyers had a spirited tilt with each other in the son. federal courtroom yesterday. The physicians were called upon to testify in the personal suit brought by Thomas C. Carroll against the Nebraska Telephone company holding a series of meetings in this city for for severe injuries received by the falling of a telephone pole which he had climbed in the discharge of his duties as lineman for the company. They occupied nearly the whole day, and the net result was the showing that Carroll's injury was such that he would always remain a cripple unless a series of critical and expensive surgical operations could relieve him.

When the doctors concluded their testimony the plaintiff went on the stand and detailed his side of the story. Morseman, of counsel for defendant, moved for the dismissal of the case on the grounds that the plaintiff had failed to show that the telephone company was in any way responsible for the accident, and that it had been proved by his own witnesses that a part of his duties was to inspect all poles belonging to the company's lines and to know that they were safe. Mr. Morseman argued the case at some length, citing supreme court decisions to sustain his contention. One authority was Stroble against the Chicago Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad company, Seventieth Iowa, which he contended was a case covering all of the issues raised in the in accordance suit. Stroble was employed by the Baker. railroad company to load coal schutes and while so engaged the gangway leading from the incline to the chutes fell and the plaintiff was severely hurt. Suit was brought in the district court and judgment obtained against the company. Upon appeal to the lowa supreme court the justices held that as the evidence showed that the stairway was erected exclusively for the use of Stroble and his fellow workmen and used by none others it was as much a part of their duty to see and know that it was safe as it was to load the coal, and the finding of the lower court was accordingly reversed.
