Amusements. Two good-sized audiences yesterday greeted the company which opened three nights' engagement of "A Green Good Man" at the Creighton theater. The farce-comedy is presented by W. E. Gorman's comedians in a pleasing manner. There is rather more nonsense than in the average attraction of this kind, and the specialties are sufficiently amusing to make one forget the cares of business or the worry of the campaign. In these days, however, one does not expect to see anything so original and clever excluded from the stage, so in this play there are humorous allusions to each of the presidential candidates and the house and senate opportunities to manifest its preferences.
