COCKRAN GIVES SOUND ADVICE.

Republicans and Sound Money Democrats are working together.

The speech of the Hon. Bourke Cockran at the dinner of the Chamber of Commerce on Tuesday evening expressed in eloquent language the tone and temper of the democrats of whom he is so distinguished a representative.

As Mr. Cockran said, those "forces of disorder" are still in the field, being marshaled by their defeated leader for a new assault upon the republican party.

Now that the election is over, and the danger averted for the time being, there remain, accordingly, as Mr. Cockran remarked on Tuesday evening, two organized political forces; the forces of disorder in control of the democratic organization, and the forces of order in control of the republican organization.

SCHOOL BOARD DECLARED VOID.

Negligence in Its Issue Renders It Entirely Invalid.

PIERRE, S. D., Nov. 22.—(Special.)—In the case of C. Livingston against School District No. 7, Brookings county, which was decided by the supreme court last week, the question at issue is the validity of a bond issued by the district. Under authority of a special act of the legislature of the territory in 1879, the school district was authorized to issue bonds in a sum not to exceed $2,000, and that in the issue of such bonds they should not be required to pay more than $500 nor a lesser amount than $50.

AN ANCIENT JERSEY JACKPOT

A Poker Episode Old Enough to Sport Whiskers.

The old settlers around Cedar Lake, Atlantic county, N. J., are still talking about a remarkable poker game that was played there away back in the '40s, the principal feature of which was a series of strange deals and an enormous jackpot.

As the neighborhood chroniclers tell it, relates a correspondent of the Globe-Democrat, it happened this way: In 1845 the pioneers in and around Cedar Lake were hunting grounds for sportsmen from New York and Philadelphia. Deer were plentiful in those days and every fall and winter Isaac Hobron, who kept a tavern on the Egg Harbor turnpike, in the heart of the pines, did a land office business.

When the sportsmen were not ranging the woods in search of game they put in their time playing cards and playing cards in the big reception room of the tavern, and it is recorded that enough money changed hands under the roof of the Hobron tavern, before he wiped it out of existence, to buy every inch of land in Atlantic county at $10 an acre.

One afternoon the four men got around a table and started a game. They rarely played together, and the game was not playing was watched with a good deal of interest by other guests, because a pot with $1,000 or $5,000 in it was a common thing.

At last Traverse dealt and he was "given" the "widow" was fattened meant $3 to the man who dealt best. It was a good deal of money, and the deal was a good one.

Traverse passed the cards to Whitcomb, who quickly dealt them. Nobody caught "openers" and the pack went to Potter, who longed in the afternoon to get a deal and the cards went to Duncan, who said as he picked them up and prepared to deal: "I wish they dealt and put a man caught, you can get a little fun for your money."

They were all in. The best hand out was held by Traverse, and that was as high. The four men ran the pot for a while, and caught an opening pair. In the center of the table was a pile of banknotes that made the spectators yelp like this before: "Some sort of witchery appeared to have gotten into the cards. Forty-four more times they dealt and put a man caught, you can get a little fun for your money."

The game began about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, and the pot was $1,000. The pile of money on the table grew gradually and the crowd around the players became more deeply interested.

The women passed the cards to Whitcomb, and yet the jackpot had not been opened. "I move that we adjourn for one hour," said Traverse, "but we will get away with the table a little while our luck'll change."

The men agreed to take a rest for an hour. The money in the pot was taken in by the crowd, and the pot was ready to steam in rapid succession by the four players.

The crowd surrounding the players became excited over the strange run of the cards, and they were going to cry and themselves that certain deals would bring "openers" to some one of the players. At last some of the men became so bolder and through their interest in the game and the exhilaration of Hobron's tiddies that it was decided to lay the game over until the afternoon, when it would be continued from the point where it was dropped.

The cards had been dealt 238 times, and no man had held as high a pair of jacks. The jackpot was now some thing like $1,000 in it, and each man was anxious to win it.

The players went to bed, hunted in the forest, and at 4 o'clock in the afternoon sat down to finish the game. The story of the peculiar run of the cards had spread throughout the neighborhood, and when the four men sat down to the table the big room was crowded with men, many of whom had driven a dozen miles to witness the playing.

A new pack of cards was demanded by Traverse. "If the devil's in that pack we had last night," said he, "we'll see how long it will last."

His satanic majesty appeared to be equal to the test he was put to, for deal after deal he dealt aces, kings, queens, and jacks, and a man was strong enough to open the pot.

Supper was brought to the players, and they ate from the card table. After it was over they played on until midnight with no change in the run of the cards.

Finally, Potter suggested that Hobron be permitted to come in and deal the cards, and made no difference. Then different men were called upon to "allice" the pack, but that brought no change.

At 1 o'clock Whitcomb remarked that he feared the devil had started out to break them all, and then take the jackpot himself. The dealing continued till 4 o'clock when the "openers" out and then another twelve-hour adjournment of the game was taken, and there was then in the jackpot nearly $2,500.

The crowd was wild. The men who had been playing cards for the night were all in a fever of excitement, and they were all in a fever of excitement, and they were all in a fever of excitement.

AMUSEMENTS.

The lovers of the spectacular were out in force last night at the Creighton to witness the familiar adventures of the Black Crook and enjoy the interesting situations of Barre's thrilling story. Tompkins' "Black Crook" is well known to the theatrical patrons of Omaha, and this season loses nothing in comparison with previous years' productions.

The first concert of the Omaha Symphony Orchestra will be heard in Boyd's theater on Tuesday night, and promises to be the greatest musical event of the season, given by local artists. The consensus of opinion expressed by the Commercial club, the clergy and by musical people generally and those who take pride in the upbuilding of Omaha enterprise, is that the city needs a grand orchestra and one that will place Omaha in the same rank as her sister cities.

MANY WOMEN MENACED.

They Find a Strong Defense Against Danger That Moves Near.

"Consumptive! Wasting away! Losing flesh! Tired out! Exhausted!" These are all different ways of describing one great form of weakness from which thousands of women are suffering. They are nervous, thin-faced women who lack brightness, vivacity and seem to be continually weak, exhausted and worn out. They are usually pale, dyspeptic and never have a fresh, healthy color. Many of them realize that they are in danger of contracting quick consumption and would gladly learn how to gain increased vigor, health and strength. It is for the benefit of such women that the following words have been specially printed:

Mrs. M. Newson, 272 11th St., Brooklyn, N. Y., writes: "By the use of Duffy's pure malt whiskey I have gained increased health and strength, and today am feeling better than I have felt for many years. It is an excellent preparation and I can strongly recommend it."

Thousands of opinions similar to the above have been constantly received from all who have been treated with this great stimulant. Their words prove beyond question that Duffy's pure malt whiskey cannot only work up the system, but it also creates a healthy appetite, tones up the digestive organs and purifies the blood. It gives strength and nourishment when everything else fails, and it is especially adapted to the needs of women, but care should be taken to get the genuine.
