HIS OCCUPATION RESTRICTED.

The Horse Steadily Losing His Grip—French Automobiles.

Without doubt the French have taken the lead in the matter of automobiles, or horseless carriages. It is more than probable that they will keep it for some time to come, since they are giving an undivided attention to perfecting this curious vehicle.

In this country, says the New York Herald, the idea has not yet fastened itself on the general mind. We occasionally see the automobile in our thoroughfares, but so infrequently that the crowd turns to watch it when it is approching. In France, however, its appearance is so common that the looker-on does not even shrug his shoulders. He does not wonder if it has come to stay, for that question was settled long ago. The demand for the vehicle is so great that "many new factories have been opened," and in spite of that fact one has to wait from four to six months before his order can be filled.

We Americans are for the present satisfied, apparently, with the bicycle. The thousands on the boulevard of an evening, with their brilliant headlights, resemble a swarm of fireflies on a picnic. Not even the tricycle attracts our attention, though the demand is said to be on the increase.

What is to become of the horse? Well, we won't cross that bridge until we come to it. The horse is all right just now, and so far as we know he is not worrying about his future.

CAUSE OF MUCH CONFUSION

South Dakota Disturbed Over the Vote Against Prohibition.

HOW THE PROPOSITION WAS CARRIED

Opponents of the Saloon Insist that the Constitution Cannot Be Changed in the Manner Prescribed.

CHAMBERLAIN, S. D., Nov. 26.—(Special.)—The manner in which the proposition to repeal the prohibition clause of the state constitution appeared on the ballots in the recent election continues to be the cause of much confusion and discussion in some quarters as to whether or not the prohibitory law has really been repealed by the comparatively small vote which was cast in its favor. Numberless errors in marking the ballot were made in all parts of the state. It is alleged that in one county the vote of an entire township on the amendment was thrown out by the canvassing board because the voters of a Bohemian settlement in the township placed a cross before the word "No" when they intended to vote in the affirmative on the repeal of prohibition. The canvassing board, of course, had no power to throw out the vote or any part of it. Until the state canvassing board meets on December 3 the exact vote will not be known, but so far as can be ascertained at this time, out of 90,000 votes polled in the state at the recent election, only about two-thirds, or 60,000, were recorded on the proposition to repeal the prohibitory law, and of those voting on the question a majority of about 4,500 favored the repeal of the law.

The problem therefore arises: Can the constitution of the state be changed by a minority vote? In discussing this feature of the controversy, N. C. Nash, ex-commander of the South Dakota Grand Army of the Republic, and who has always been a strong champion of prohibition, goes thoroughly over the ground and makes out what can be considered subsantially the prohibitionists' side of the case. The question, he thinks, will likely be taken before the state supreme court for decision. The article relating to amendments to the constitution consists of two sections. The first relates to amendments to the instrument, and the second to the ordering of a convention for a general overhauling of the fundamental law of the state. Section 1 provides that "If the people shall approve and ratify such proposed amendment or amendments by a majority of the electors voting thereon," etc. Section 2 reads differently. It says "If a majority of all the electors voting at said election" are in favor, the convention shall be ordered.

APPLIES TO THIS CASE.

The first section, which, in the opinion of well posted attorneys, applies exactly to the present case, is open to the construction that those voters who failed to register their votes for or against an amendment will not be considered at all; that so far as the proposed amendment is concerned they might as well have remained away from the polls. But no such construction can be placed on the provision for calling a constitutional convention. In the latter case every voter who fails to vote for the proposition must be counted against it. The first section can be construed that only the votes registered for or against an amendment are to be counted, and upon a majority of the votes so recorded depends the fate of the proposed amendment.

Mr. Nash contends that this construction is a dangerous one, as can be shown by citing a case which, while it might never occur, is certainly within the range of possibilities. If an amendment were submitted and out of 80,000 votes cast only 1,000 voted for the amendment and 999 against it, according to this construction the fundamental law of the state could be changed by a very small minority. So, also, if 100 votes were registered in favor of an amendment and none against it, the 100 votes would change the constitution. In nearly every county in the state which gave a majority for the repeal of prohibition the majority thus cast was a minority of the total vote cast in the county. There is little question that the sentiment of the state was strongly in favor of repealing prohibition, but so many mistakes were made in marking ballots that the vote as returned may not accurately express the intention of the voters. Had all those who are opposed to prohibition voted on the proposition at the recent election the majority in favor of repealing the prohibitory law would have been overwhelming. As it was, there was a general belief that it would carry anyway, and consequently thousands of voters who favored the repeal did not go to the trouble to vote upon the matter at all. Many who did vote, supposing they were voting for or against prohibition direct, voted yes or no as their inclination may have been for or against the law. Thus a voter placing his X before the word "No" with the belief that he was voting against prohibition voted for exactly the opposite of what he intended.

COST OF BUFFALO SKIN COATS.

Can Scarcely Be Purchased at Any Price Now.

VERMILLION, S. D., Nov. 26.—(Special.)—A seedy looking tramp offered a fine buffalo coat for sale on the Vermillion streets recently for the sum of $5. For some reason he failed to find a purchaser and went his way westward. There was too much suspicion as to whom the original owner might be. A buffalo coat nowdays is worth a snug little sum and in fact it is almost impossible to buy one at all. Several old settlers in this city and county wear buffalo coats, which, although purchased at a very small price originally, could not be bought now for any amount of money. A business man in this city, who wears a coat, perfect in every way, was offered $100 cash by a commercial man, but the offer was refused. Some twenty years ago the coat was purchased in the form of two rough hides from a band of Indians for a mere song. The hides were afterwards neatly dressed and made into a fashionable coat. The fur is easily taken care of and will remain sleek for years. No fur is as warm as the buffalo and for cold, wintry weather a coat made from a buffalo skin is a luxury indeed. It is in the memory of the oldest settlers here when the Indians used to make their annual visits from the western agencies to these parts for their regular supply of "kinnikinic," which grows in large quantities in this vicinity. The old chief of the tribe would always accompany the band and for years made his regular visits. He used to pitch his tepee near the old fort on the Missouri river and was an intimate friend of Captain Winner, commander of the fort. The chief's lodge was very large and was made of thirty or more white buffalo skins neatly sewed together in one great sheet. The space within was about thirty feet in diameter and about the same in height. Sometimes there were as many as fifty lodges, of different size and make, pitched at one time. The visitors usually stayed about two weeks. Those were the times when buffalo skins sold for a "farthing."

Preparing for a Grand Concert.

VERMILLION, S. D., Nov. 26.—(Special.)—Prof. F. A. Balloseyers, director of the department of music of the State university at this place, is planning to give a grand concert the latter part of December, at which a chorus of forty voices will render the "Hallelujah Chorus." The professor has a chorus of forty voices under training, which will soon be able to sing the most difficult music. During the time that Dr. Olson was president of the university, Prof. Balloseyers had charge of the college of music and under his skillful management it became self-supporting and was known throughout the northwest. Soon after Dr. Olson's death the professor left the university and has been away for five years or more. By great good fortune his services have been secured once more and already the musical department has risen to the point where satisfaction is given to every one. Under the professor's direction the university chorus of fifty voices gave the "Messiah" some five years ago in Sioux City. The present enrollment of the college of music is about sixty, the largest since his former professorship at the university.
