The Great Captain Sketched his Own Duty in the Field.

RECOLLECTIONS OF GEN. HORACE PORTER

Before and After the Battle of the Wilderness—The "Whitish" Cigar and the "Whitish" Stick—A Few Scenes.

The current number of Century publishes another installment of General Horace Porter's "Campaigning with Grant."

It treats of the Battle of the Wilderness and the events preceding and following that terrible contest. These events are sketched, in part, as follows:

The members of the headquarters mess soon after assembled to partake of a hearty breakfast. The general made no elaborate meal preparatory to so exhausting a day as that which was to follow.

He would at times walk slowly up and down, but most of the day he sat upon the stump of a tree, or the ground, with his legs leaning against a tree.

A little to the east of the crossroads stood the old Wilderness tavern, a deserted building surrounded by a rank growth of weeds.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the many physical ailments which afflict the human race, it is not surprising that the efforts of the medical profession to relieve suffering are constantly being directed to the relief of the afflicted.
