Testimony Concerning the Deputies of Ex-Oil Inspector Hillen.

STANDARD COMPANY GETS ALL IT WANTS

Point of Importance Hinges on Whether or Not Gasoline Can Be Properly Designated as Illuminating Oil.

LINCOLN, Dec. 2.—(Special)—The Hillen case is approaching a close in Judge Cornish's court.

At the conclusion of the testimony a motion was made by the attorney general to instruct the jury to return a verdict for the state on the evidence presented.

The points involved are whether or not gasoline is illuminating oil and if the inspector brands the gasoline as such, the companies, is he compelled to turn the same into the state's treasury?

At the conclusion of the testimony a motion was made by the attorney general to instruct the jury to return a verdict for the state on the evidence presented.
