A SIOUX INDIAN EPISODE.

Recollections of the Pine Ridge War. (General Guy V. Henry in Harper's Weekly.) While seated in my office at Fort McKinley, Wyo., on the 10th day of November, 1890, the following telegram was handed me:

Move out as soon as possible with the wagon transportation you can bring, all pack animals and saddle; extra ammunition and rations will be provided when you reach the railroad—By Order of the Department Commander.

What possible cause for this interruption of our peace and happiness and the breaking up of a happy home? The cause was usually trying winter, and the leaving of our families could not be imagined.

Preparations were at once made, and the following day we marched out of Fort McKinley with troop D, Ninth Cavalry, Captain Lord, Lieutenants Powell and Benton.

On returning to camp that night, while the heavy but light-hearted troops were singing negro melodies after supper, a scout, who rode a pony steaming and flecked with foam, dashed into camp, bringing in the news of the probable loss of the wagon train.

that our arrangements might mean an attack instead of a peaceful march. In a review previous to the return of the troops to their posts.

The morning broke with a pelting flurry of rain, and the snow under the feet of the dark clouds hung suspended above the hills, which surrounded the camp ground like a coliseum, and a piercing breeze swept from the north, making the contrast with the previous Mesasah weather we had been having anything but agreeable.

General Miles, after passing along the line, took position opposite the center, so that the troops were well participated in or rendered service during the Pine Ridge troubles, might march past him. They followed in columns of companies, troops, or platoons, and by infantry, cavalry, and artillery corps, respectively, and in order as above.

Then came 100 mounted Ogalala Indian scouts, commanded by Lieutenant Taylor of the Ninth Cavalry. Their precision of marching, orderly, and the way in which they had rendered valuable service during the campaign.

Current Literature.

An interesting reminiscence in the current issue of Godley's is the first paper of series describing the "Modes and Manners of Seventy Years." The article is written by Grace E. Drew and is liberally illustrated, containing many reproductions of the fashion plates of seven decades.

The New Year's Pall Mall Magazine opens with a timely and inspiring poem, "Lux Hominum," by J. A. N., illustrated by Percy F. S. Spencer. An interesting account discusses "The Sixteenth Year of the Queen of Beign and How to Celebrate It." The Countess of Cork gives "A Woman's View," Sir Evelyn Wood "A Soldier's View," and an archdeacon of London "A Churchman's View," and a composer, R. W. Lee, "A Workman's View."

So many beautiful calendars and entertaining novelties have been issued by the proprietors of Hood's Sarasparilla, that we are hardly surprised to receive this season a calendar by the same firm, and the designs in calendars, but with it coupons which entitle the recipient to attractive novelties. Every one who gets a Hood's Sarasparilla calendar by mail will receive a coupon which will prove interesting and valuable as well as a beautiful specimen of the lithographer's art.

The year's Century opens in the January number with a new story by Chester Bailey Fernand, "The Light of Sika," in which this versatile story-teller is exhibited in a strikingly new vein. The story is a tale of a wholly different sort from Hamlin Garland's "The Girl of Modern Tyne," and depicting life in a remote town. It has a striking parallel to "The Light of Sika," in the striking picture of Thulstrup, the master of Dr. S. Weir Mitchell's serial, "Hugh Wynne, Free Quaker," deals with Hugh's warlike and subsequent reaction to the same, and the subsequent reaction of General Horace Porter, in his "Campaigning with Grant," continues his series of sketches, incidents, and descriptions of the military career of the latter. The story is a picture by the late C. S. Reinhart of Grant's passage to the left on the night of the battle of Vicksburg. A paper published by the Public Library in Modern Athens, is contributed by Mr. D. B. Kikes, as the leading literary work of the month. The illustrations, which were made in a wide range and deal with Socrates in the streets of Athens, the Academy, the Academy, the Academy, and other characters in the life of the philosopher.

The first number of Harper's Bazar for 1897 contains the initial chapter of a very attractive serial on "Infancy and Childhood," written from an interesting and advanced modern ideas by Mrs. Frances Fisher Wood.

The complete novel in the January issue of Lippincott's is "Stocking" by Mrs. Mary K. Dallas. It is a tale of domestic relationships and affections, but turns into a mysterious disappearance of $2,000, and the various characters in the story.

A striking article on dueling among German students is contributed to the January issue of the Cosmopolitan by Fernand Reichard. The article is a study of the history of the duel, and the various characters in the story.

Political Science Quarterly for December contains an interesting and critical paper, pleading for "A Permanent Census Bureau." The article is written by Prof. R. Mayo-Smith. Another paper of great interest, discussing the future of the world, is by Prof. F. H. Giddings, the writer of the article, takes a hopeful view of the future of humanity, and is a study of the history of the world.

The leading feature in the December issue of the Cosmopolitan is "The Story of the Young Man," by Mrs. Mary K. Dallas. The article is a study of the history of the world, and the various characters in the story.
