WASHINGTON'S FIRST. Washington's first address dealt largely with the then untried duties of the chief executive under the new constitution. It contained one unique statement which has never been repeated. Washington said: "When I was first honored with a call into the service of my country, then on the eve of an arduous struggle for its liberties, the light in which I contemplated my duty re-quired that I should renounce every pecuni-ary compensation. From this resolution I have in no instance departed; and being still under the impressions which produced it, I must decline as inapplicable to myself share in the personal emoluments which may be indispensably included in a per-manent provision for the Executive department, and must accordingly pray that the pecuniary estimates for the station in which am placed may, during my continuance in limited to such actual expenditure as the public good may be thought to re-

Thomas Jefferson, in his second inaugural rebuked the press for defamation of the ad-ministration, and suggested punishment for slander, but drew the conclusion that unde the greatest freedom of discussion the truth must prevail. Monroe, in his second in-augural, for the first time in such an address reviewed the political issues of day in detail.

The first mention of slavery, which was to be the crucial issue of the next quarter century, was made by Van Buren in 1837, when he announced in his inaugural that he go into the presidential chair deter-to resist the slightest interference with it in the states where it existed. Gen eral William Henry Harrison warned the country against the violence of party spirit. Franklin Pierce, in 1853, announced his fidelity to the compromise measure to govern slavery, and expressed the hope that the question was at rest. Lincoln's first inaugural on the threshold of the civil war was entirely a plea for the preservation of the union.

Objecting to Garbage Contract. A petition signed by several hundred property owners demanding the repeal of the present garbage contract is now in the hands of the committee on police of the city council. The petitioners ask that the council do something to do away with what they call "the present unjust and tyrannical system and resorve to the people their inherent right of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." As the present garbage contract was for ten years, the committee will probably be compelled to inform the petitioners that they will have to struggle along under the yoke for a few years longer.
