

TUBERCULOSIS IN CATTLE

Results of Experiments Conducted by the Government in Minnesota.

DISEASE IS NOT A HEREDITARY ONE

Evidence that it can be Effectually Destroyed—Ninety Per Cent of 1,100 Cases Successfully Diagnosed.

Minnesota sanitary statisticians prove to us that one-tenth of the human family dies annually of consumption, and that, considered relatively, every tenth man, woman, and child you meet is suffering from tuberculosis. Tremendous as are the ravages of this disease among the members of the human race, its ravages become all the more appalling when we consider that one of the best friends of man, the domestic cow, is subject to the same disease and may communicate it to the human being.

During the last two years and a half, at the State Experimental station in connection with the agricultural department of the University of Minnesota extensive and important investigations have been under way, not only in the testing of cattle for tuberculosis and demonstrating the inerrancy of tuberculin as a diagnostic agent, but in that even more important work, attempting curative measures among cattle who have been found to be tuberculous. Manifestly, the cure of consumption can be assured, even in cattle, a marvelous advance has been made. And, as the bacillus which infects the tissues of a cow suffering from consumption is absolutely identical with the bacillus of consumption in a human being, the cure of the disease in cattle holds splendid hope for humanity.

A number of college professors and some prominent physicians and veterinarians were present at this post-mortem and so confident were they that the animal had been cured of all active tuberculosis, that they each took home with them, had cooked and ate from portions of the same cubic centimeter of tuberculin. The temperature rose two degrees above normal, showing, unmistakably, that tuberculosis was present. Thereafter, with no reaction, following injections were given as follows:

July 3, 2cc; November 5, 2.2cc; November 15, 3cc; January 14, 1895, 4cc; February 15, 4cc.

The dose was steadily increased, and, after the first one, the temperature did not rise, showing the same change had taken place. When the cow was post-mortemed on the third day after the last named test, it was found that she had been tuberculous to the extent of three or four cubic centimeters of tuberculin was used as a dose. In case the temperature of the animal during the tuberculin being at 10 o'clock in the evening—it was a sure indication that she was tuberculous. The culture animal will respond to this test that it is now considered practically infallible, fully 99 per cent of over of tests being found accurate.

In case there was no reaction—the term reaction, somewhat of a misnomer, indicating a rise of temperature—free from the disease, and whenever an animal has thus failed to respond and has been post-mortemed, it has been found in almost every instance, during the period Prof. Reynolds, as shown in the bulletin, has made tests in over 1,100 cows, and has fully demonstrated the infallibility of the tuberculin.

Before showing some of the curative work which has been done, it may be well to note a few instances of the use of the tuberculin on the herd at the station noted. The cattle in every case showed no sign of disease. On the contrary, they were particularly healthy-looking animals, with well-visible traces of the terrible disease which had fastened itself upon them. One instance which occurred a year ago will indicate this: A wealthy gentleman living in a neighboring city, who was bent on having his children brought up on milk that was above reproach, bought a crack Jersey cow, one with an unblemished pedigree and in the pink of condition. She appeared to be in the best of health, and Prof. Reynolds was consulted. He asked that a test be made. The gentleman scouted the idea of his fine Jersey having anything serious the matter with her, but the test was allowed, she showed unmistakable reaction, was post-mortemed and found to be fairly alive with tuberculosis. Of course, it does not follow that every tuberculous cow will carry consumption to every one who drinks of her milk, but it is beyond dispute that when a cow does not respond to the test and shows that she has no tuberculosis in her system there is no danger to man or to the milk from such a cow—well, sound sense would prescribe the only method of action.

RECORD OF TREATMENT.

Fancy's Bull was the name of one of the prime cattle of the herd, a high-pedigreed animal, one of the best of his kind. He was a fine looking animal as ever delighted to see a man, and to rise in temperature. He was 1 year old, weighed 700 pounds and was in fine condition. Here is the main record of his treatment:

LORD OF THE HEMPEL REALM

Thrilling Features of the Life of Blondin, the Famous Rope Walker.

DISPLAYS OF DAUNTLESS COURAGE

Recollections of the Man Carried on Blondin's Back Across Niagara's Gorge—Marvelous Performances Elsewhere.

Charles Blondin, the once famous rope walker, died in London a few days ago. The announcement was a surprise to most people, because Blondin had so completely dropped out of public notice that few knew of his being in the land of the living as late as February 21. He passed away on the 23d, aged 73.

To men of middle age the daring deeds of Blondin are familiar. Twenty, thirty and even forty years ago Blondin's name was a household word. He was the first man to walk across Niagara's gorge, and his feat was regarded as quite sure to end in the same fashion. But he accomplished his feat in June, 1859, and more than 300 times afterward. He played all manner of gymnastic tricks in the course of those performances, including a barrel, throwing somersaults, carrying a man on his back, walking on stilts and wrapping his head and shoulders in a blanket. One must admire the nerve of the man who carried the life of Blondin, who not only carried him across safely, but set him down six times on the same determination in his feat, and more than 300 times afterward.

Blondin's ambition was, said Mr. Colcord, speaking of the marvelous feat, "to walk across the gorge on a tight rope, with a goat on his back, and a barrel on his head. His idea was to anchor one end of the rope at Goat Island, with the old Terrapin tower, long since removed, as the support on the American side, and to extend the rope across the Horseshoe Falls, through the mist of Table Rock, where it would be anchored to the rock. He had a partner, A. M. Porter, was the owner of the land and he would not give his consent. He thought the performance entirely too foolish. We worked a year to get the rope fixed in that way, but failed in the end. Perhaps it was wise that our efforts resulted in nothing, for the cable would have been sure to slip the rope about half way between the old bridge and Niagara Falls, and that would have been the end of it. I was that we made our first ascent, and I took my first perilous ride on Blondin's back.

KEEP YOUR MOUTH SHUT.

Advice That Would Be Useful to a Young Man in Any Case.

It is a rule of the schoolboys and college men that the fellow who keeps his mouth shut is always the big man; that he who deliberately says little quickly wins for himself the name for wisdom. Such statements are quite as true in the outer world to a certain degree as they are in college and school. The pluck of the man, says Harry M. Colcord, is that if you do not say anything, you will not be taken advantage of. The temptation of the average man is to talk too much, and to say what he has in his mind. It is a habit that is often, perhaps, covers up an empty mind as it does the wisdom of Solomon. There is, however, a good rule to follow, which may be given briefly to the effect that if we will say little until we have thoroughly made up our mind, and then not to hesitate in your statements. Interfered. He performed on the rope in London when he was 70 years old and to the last retained his marvelous agility and energy.

His career has never been equalled or approached by any other performer on the rope, and the nerve which saved him from the danger of more than half a century was the subject of investigation and admiration of more than one medical society.

As an illustration of his quality the following anecdote is quoted from Cassell's Magazine: "A feat that Blondin could not rehearse was performed at the Zoological gardens, Liverpool. He had given an afternoon performance there and was to perform again in the evening. During the interval between the performances some one suggested playfully that it would be a fine thing if he would take a lion across. Capital idea, thought Blondin. So he indicated to the management his readiness to wheel across any lion they liked to see up to him. The lion chosen was eighteen months old and was known as 'Tom Sawyer.' The performance was in the afternoon, and it was just getting dark when the lion was slung up and strapped to the barrow. A pretty stiff gale was blowing. The rope sagged a good deal, so that Blondin had to be very careful to keep his feet from slipping. He was, therefore, deemed advisable that some control should be kept over the barrow and its strange freight from the terrace place, down the incline of rope to prevent it from running away with him down hill. So a line was attached to the barrow to keep it in check, and the end of that line was held by an attendant on the platform at the madhouse."

A THRILLING EPISODE.

On walked Blondin, trundling his load behind him. He was famous as a rope walker, and he stretched his rope, 1,100 feet long, over the gorge of Niagara, and 165 feet above the river. Before that feat the famous performer in connection with cataraacts was Sam Patch, who had crossed the line, the Genesee falls, 125 feet high, and Blondin's project was regarded as quite sure to end in the same fashion. But he accomplished his feat in June, 1859, and more than 300 times afterward. He played all manner of gymnastic tricks in the course of those performances, including a barrel, throwing somersaults, carrying a man on his back, walking on stilts and wrapping his head and shoulders in a blanket.
