A gigantic enterprise has been undertaken in very depressed times; the idea is to call attention to western resources and bring more people and money to the west. People who are familiar with the conditions of the exposition at this time are astonished at the progress made. It is going to be a great success and it is going to open June 1, 1338, and run till November. The public spirit of the people in this vicinity is taking hold of every man, woman and child and all are going to help in every way they can and in no way can they help more than to forward subscriptions now, because many architects are at work on plans for the buildings and very soon contracts will be called for and then we must have large sums of money. Don't call it an exposition gotten up to benefit the executive committee, Board of Managers or Board of Directors, because they are all giving their time without one cent of compensation. They are good bus-iness men and intend to successfully build an exposition that will be strictly first class in every department, one that will be memorable and that can be pointed to with pride.
