'byes.' The next morning he woke up, under guard, in a Buffalo recruiting office, and wa ever heard the last of the Irish grenadier at Bull Run, and soon afterward, by the order of the colonel, our ideal warrior was told that he had been enlisted to serve the United States. He accepted the situation philosophically, loss of bounty, which his placed on permanent detail at the regimental stable, and served his time out standing captors had pocketed, and all, and settled down to soldiers' fare and hard lines at the guard over horseflesh, horse equipage and front, determined to take revenge for his injury out of the enemy. He was a roaring "The boys missed the fun they had with

O'Gorman in the company bivouacs, until another Irishman took his place. This was a plebelan without the O' to his name. He comrade among the boys, always happy and scattering sunshine around him, but in the trenches under fire he was a perfect fiend. He was continually inventing some device to was plain Mat Gorman. Mat's idea of war was that it gave a chance for fun as well as fighting, and there couldn't be too much of hurt the confederates across the lines. He searched out the best places to get crack shots at some of them unawares. He ineither for his liking. He was in every scrape in the company and regiment, and even the brigade. Soldiers are not saints, and the men vented little shells, which he could fire out of his rifle high into the air to drop down into the enemy's camps and explode. They may have taken life-in fact, men were seen commanded were no exception to the rule. There was many a raiding expedition and foraging foray in the course of which yathe fall where they struck, and at any rate they were very annoying visitors, and the idea tickled their inventor. Every time that rious kinds of property belonging to friend or foe got into the wrong hands, giving his shots created a commotion in the enemy's work to the patrol to detect the offenders if they could, and find and restore the lost lines he would yell in a sing-song tone of triumph, 'Ow-ow, Johnnie, d'ye mind? Ow-ow!" He would put up dummy figures property anyway. This last they could often do after a long search when it had been for the confederates to fire at, and when they struck it with their wasted shot, he, lurking taken from friends as a practical joke. Mat had a cousin in one of the regular batteries under cover to return the fire, would yell, 'Ow-ow Johnnie, d'ye mind? Ow-ow!' This shout, of course, amused us all a great deal attached to our brigade, company D, Fifth United States artillery. He spent a good deal of his leisure time with his cousin, and became a well-known character to the men of 'Badthery D,' as he called it. Whenever the patrol came through our camps searching for missing property at first, but we did not take kindly to the sort of warfare he was given to, shooting down or warrance he was great of remonstrated unsuspecting enemies, so I remonstrated with him and tried to dissuade him, but it did no good. He said he had to get square with some one. His ory could be heard on the outposts day and night, and it became weird Mat was always in evidence, looking on at the search. He kept a straight face, and after awhile would innocently ask what had been lost. As soon as the plunder was de-scribed he would say: 'I saw that very same thing lasht night over in Badthery D.' Having put the patrol on the wrong scent. and terrible when we knew its significance for many and many a poor southerner going quietly about in Lee's camps, who might have lived through ordinary battle dangers, was sent to death, murderously, with no other requiem than that wild Iriahman's demoniacal yell, 'Ow-ow Johnnie, d'ye mind? he would give the tip to the guilty ones, with whom he generally stood in, and the missing property was transferred from place to place Ow-ow!" in the camp, and if the search of our quar-ters got very hot the articles were somehow "But the last time that I heard it I laughed till I cried. teens of strong water slung over each shoulder, an uncorked one in his right hand and a pint in cup in his left, treating the thirsty, half-famished confederates and drinking theirs health. As every brimming bumper went down he sounded, with new and happy meaning, the old refrain. "The celebration of victory and the sobering up lasted him for two or three days. I strolled through the bivouac one morning just as he was coming to. Spying me, he rolled over in his blanket and called out: "'Colonel, dear, what happened lately, at

Coffee.

About this time last year there was a heavy increase in the receipts of coffee at primary points. For instance, the receipts at Rio and Santos for the week ending May 15 last year were 3,000 bags, and during the following week they jumped to 31,000 bags, and for the week cuding May 29 they were 33,000 bags. At the present time receipts are liberal, and the total crop movement to date has been $.115,000 bags, and some estimate that the receipts during the balance of this month and during June will average about 14,000 bags per day. With this daily aver-age there may be expected to come forward the balance of this crop year about 375,000 bags, thus making the total crop for the season, say 8,500,000 bags, againt 5,476,000 baga the previous crop year. With these large supplies before the market there is a disposition on the part of operators to hold off, and this of course tends to make trade
