R. Thomp-son by 'Squire Hancock a few days ago. Thompson is an employe of Mrs. Metcalf, and by her directions has filled up a ditch dug by the supervisor for the purpose of draining the water from the highway into the premises of the woman. The ditch had been opened by the supervisor a great many times, and he would always find it filled up again the following morning. He finally kept a nightly vigil until he caught the hired man in the act. Mrs. Metcalf, after the arrest of her hired man, constructed a strong embankment just inside of her fence that answers the same purpose as filling the ditch in the road. The supervisor threatened to go on the premises and cut this em-bankment, and to restrain him she applied to the court for an injunction. Her petition alleges that the culvert and ditch con-structed by the supervisor were for the purpose of damaging her property by turning a flood of muddy water into her doorway at every heavy rain rather than for the improvement of the highway.
