Judge McGee and a jury, after spending two days in the superior court, arrived at a judgment yesterday in the case of L. C. Billo against J. F. McGinty. Billo is a well digger and he contracted with McGinty to provide him with a well that would have an inexhaustible supply of water. The well was bored down a distance of 267 feet when an exhausties supply of water well mixed an exhaustless supply of water well mixed with quicksand was reached. A pump wes attached and after pumping a large quantity of sand and some water the pump refused to work, and in course of time fifty-three feet of quicksand found its way into the pump and tubing. An attempt to pull out the pump was only partially successful, and part of the pump was left in the bottom of the well. Billo sued for the contract price, $1 per foot. During the argument of the case "Down went McGinty to the bottom of the well" was quoted or alluded to 314 times. The jury ignored the instructions of the court, which directed them if they found for the defendant to bring in a verdict of $25 for McGinty, which he had advanced to Billo while the well was being bored. They found for the defendant and named $1.
