DULLEST TIME IN SOCIETY

FEW OUTDOOR AND INFORMAL AFFAIRS

Prople Are Still Leaving Town to Es enpe the Heat Incident to the Last Week of Sommer.

On the familiar hippotomical principle that "a short horse is soon curried," the society events of the past week are briefly recorded ter of a century ago all were Nebraskan and quickly read. No similar period since and close friends. Various vocations have the penitential season has seen so little going on, and even Lent had brisker weeks, for there are many, alas, who pursue their pleasures unminiful of the obligations of that holy time. Last week was so hot in point of weather that another breaking out of the recent epidemic of summer matrimony was confidently looked for; but the meager result disappointed all hopes and upset all calcu-Intions.

Engagements? Well, that is another mat ter. The younger folk have been aparently Indefatigable in their joyous pursuits through all the torrid days and sultry evenings, and it is more or less darkly hinted that certain hearts, warmly beseiged, have not remained altogether obdurate. Capitulations of this sort, however, if any there be, are not yet given out to the hungry readers of the society page, who are hereby recommended to possess their souls with what patience they may and trust to time to bring develop

Only one story which seems worth telling arises out of the scanty materials of the week, and that, like the horse and the record in general, is a short one. A certain mem of society, whose membership is of such a nature as to entitle him to unquestioned precedence over most of his les sfortunate fellows, is at present and for a few days enjoying the not unmixed delights of temperary bachelorhood. His social prominenc has been attained by genuine merit and un alterable mildness, aided somewhat by the possession and memory of an illustrious ancestry, and he is the very least possible given to convivial pleasures, even when his wife Wherefore his friends were conds away. scious of a mild curicalty when he appeared one Sunday morning wearing the dull eyes and the haggard countenance which come from dissipation over night.

from dissipation over night. "Yes," said he, in a voice in which pride and shame strove for the mastery, "I was on a frightful tear last night. I visited Schlitz's and Fritz Wirth's both within an hour!" "But what did you drink?" asked h's friend, with visions of mixed beverages. "Oh, I stuck to sarsaparilla," replied the other. Barta Statist - The Statist - The Statist - The Statist MUSIC.

Land the start of Somebody found ont, long ago, that "In union there is strength," and to believe in and trust in union as an element of strength is decidedly American. Universal principles apply to music onite as surely as to other departments of human thought and endeavor, therefore it is reasonable to hold that musicians will aid their cause by workin gtogether rather, than separately, and in each other's interests rather than against In many of the states the teachers have united in a common educational enterprise known as the State Music Teachers' asso-clation, and are accustomed to held annual conventions at which essays are read, speeches delivered, recitals and concerts given and a spirit of good fellowship developed. During the summer the average teacher has very little work to do and his time is free to devote to recreation or to per age is to afford, during July and August A. Lundquist, the Swedish traveling pas-senger agent for the Union Pacific, who has The tendency of the

The Chautauqua "idea" is to afford teachers—and others—the opportunity from San Francisco. to study, under the most favorable conditions, during vacation and at the same time get change and recreation. The teacher rest, change and recreation. The teacher loads up for the coming season of labor. He takes on a new stock of ideas and inspira-tion which he hopes will last him until the coming of another summer. The music teach-er needs a like opportunity. He needs new was expected. er needs a like opportunity. He needs new ideas and new inspiration and these state as-sociations have been organized to give them to him. Not that he again takes lessons of his fellow teachers; education is an inter change of ideas. When one has given ou store of knowledge on a given subject he has not lost it or forgotten it, but instead, he has impressed it all the more securely on his own mind. He has been his own teacher as well as his fellows', and when the music teachers of a great state meet in convention and talk over-in public and private-musical history and interpretations and each they have benefited themselves other. When they discuss the various needs of the different towns, become aware of the art conditions that prevail in them and se their minds to improve where improvement is possible they have taken up the most valuable line of work that can ever come before them and one which helps him most who is mest actively engaged in It.

Musicians should be personally acquainted: they should know each other and try to de-velop a broad friendship. There is a feeling among those outside of music, but who musi be relied upon to support it, that there can be no harmony among musicians who are always in a jangle among themselves and can therefore never work together. That is an error. All the great musical enterprises in the world are possible because musicians do work together. A musician is by necessity a consolcuous member of a communit, and whatever he does is also conspicuous If he has a little trouble or misunderstand ing with a fellow musician people know it and, very unfortunately, exaggerate it until a reconciliation is rendered difficult. As a As a ceneral thing if the musicians were left to hemselves their troubles would die from lack of fuel. It is certain that the music teachers of a great state can benefit themselves greatly and increase their power for good to their quainted with each other and learning to work together.

Nebraska has no state organization of its music teachers. Indeed there has been so little unity of action among its musicians and music teachers that our great state is almost an unknown country in the realm of art. Nothing is done unless somebody does it, and "what is everybody's business is nobody's:" therefore nothing has been done to unite the musical forces of the state and center them upon its artistic development. The writer believes it to be time to form an organization which shall include all the meritorious music teachers in the state. In workers in the education of the public who should come together, get acquainted, ex-change ideas, develop new enthusiasm and prepare to go back to their various fields of usefulness ready to do more than ever before for the upbuilding of art in Nebraska. Next summer the Transmississippi Exposition will be in session in Omaha and it would be to the advantage of every teacher in the state to have the first convention held here during the progress of the exposition. If its musical department is well organized no music teacher can afford to miss hearing its great concerts and coming

Four or five days spent in convention and at concerts would be a liberal education to the many who cannot go to Chicago or New York to attend the opera or to spend the summer The teachers of this state should consider the proposition of a State Music Teachers' association. Experience in other states has led to the conclusion that it is a source of benefit to all who have a part in it.

In the musical department at Chautauqua N. Y., the west is well represented. Among the most prominent singers now upon its platform is Miss Zora Gladys Norlocker, not long since a resident of Hastings, now of New York City. Miss Norlocker possesses a contralto voice of great power and beauty and sings with a power that is contagious. Another westerner is Henry Vincen of Rev. B. T. Vincent, and nephew of Bishop John H. Vincent, the founder of Chautauqua. "Harry" is here on his merite chautauqua. Harry is here on his identi-and is a planist of rare ability.
