ADVICE TO STAY-AT-HOMES.

A Doctor's Gratuitous Tips to Hay Fever Victims.

"This is the season upon which victims of hay fever look with dread," says a doctor in the St. Louis Republic. "They know by bitter experience that between about the middle of August and the middle of September they have an ordeal to pass through which is truly terrible. Of course, there are degrees in severity, but the average sufferer from hay fever (or more correctly speaking, autumnal catarrh—for the hay-making season is over long before hay fever sets in) when in his asthmatic paroxysm, endures untold agonies.

"Did you ever see a patient in the act of going through his fight for breath? It is painful to witness, even for a physician, whose sympathies have been blunted by years of association with disease and its miseries. The patient, about the middle of August, experiences an intolerable itching and burning of eyes and throat, which is soon accompanied by an inordinate and provoking desire to sneeze. This sneezing and irritation of the eyes and throat becomes intensified as the days go by, and merges into a second stage, i. e., of bronchial irritation which manifests itself by a dry, tickling cough with little or no expectoration. The continual coughing and sneezing brings about a soreness of the chest, such as you would expect when contracting an ordinary cold.

"About August 25 the first asthmatic symptoms appear. You may think it strange that I should specify a certain date for its onset, but I think nearly every doctor's record book will show that just about that time his patients grow suddenly worse. Nothing in the whole category of human ills is so certain as the exactness with which attacks of hay fever recur. It is almost ludicrous in its exactness.
