AN EARLY AUTUMN GOWN FROM HARPER'S BAZAR

Never are clothes more enjoyed than in the early autumn, when summer's heat, still lingering in the daytime, is tempered by the coolness of the dawn and the evening. One cares more for a dainty gown to be worn in this pleasant mid-season than she does for the toilettes which wearied her when the humid atmosphere and torrid sun made life a burden and dressing a toil. Our pretty girl, still loitering in rural resorts, may have her choice of beautiful costumes by consulting Harper's Bazar. The most exacting taste cannot but be satisfied with a gown (illustrated herewith and taken from that periodical) of cream mousseline de sole over cream-colored silk. This would e becoming to a blonde or brunette, and has the charm of great daintiness equally and simplicity combined. The skirt, opening a little way on one side, is finished with Ince insertion and a how of reddish mauve velvet. The waist is draped and shirred in wide bands, each frill of the shirring being beaded with very narrow ribbon in mauve velvet. The collar, belt and bows are also in mauve velvet. The hat, of mauve velvet, is finished with black ostrich tips.

The opera can very well spare her, Mrs. Oliphant was a home-loving and re-served woman, a devoted and model mother, from the standpoint of art, as she is by no means a star there. But she really has a lovely face, a pre-Raphaelite face of a type very unusual in a French ballet dancer, which makes one think of a Botticelli Maa most sympathetic friend, while her notable contemporary, Miss Ingelow, found her happiness in parish work and in the companionship of a few tried and trusted donna.
