No Lead Used, Though the Name Clings to Them. Once pieces of lead were used for ng, and we continue to use the word, though lead is no longer a part of our pencils. The Philadelphia Times in speaking of these useful articles regrets that history has failed to record the name of the great genius who gave to the world that most useful little instrument, and says we have heard all about the discovery of burnt snuff and the sewing machine and the typewriter and all that, but the inventor of the lead pencil has, evidently, gone down into the shadow of ob-livion "unwept, unhonored and unsung."

WORK OF WEATHER BUREAU

FIVE DISTINCT BRANCHES OF THE SERVICE

Telegraph and Mail Service Employed to Secure Prompt and Accurate Reports_Recollections of "Old Probabilities."

Influence of fortuitous changes, writes Prof. Cleveland Abbe in the New York Independent; in fact, the appointment of Prof. a graded system of positions and salaries, from the senior professor down to the youngest observer, say 600 in all, who devote their whole time and energy to the work of the bureau. About 400 others are temporarily employed for river or rainfall work. One of the most prominent features of the service is the climate and crop division, with its 3,000 voluntary observers, who make regular monthly reports by mail, and by whose help we are able to present the details of the distribution of rainfall, snowfall and temperature. Many of wave of fortune, sat in the gallery of the these observers have kept records for ten or house of representatives and listened to a of them are the successors of the voluntary had been held during the previous summer observers who were secured by the Smith- and the liquor people had sustained a stunby Meigs for the Interior department. All these are considered as belonging to the climatological Childs, a member from Columbia, had the service, as distinguished from the storm and weather service; for the work of the whole bureau may be practically divided into (1) the forecast service, for predicting storms and weather, cold waves and frests; (2) the rupted the speaker, who held the untilriver and flood service, for predicting the floods and drouths; (3) the climatic service. for recording and presenting the details of climate in general; (4) the climate and crop service, which publishes and studies the relations of the climate to the crops; (5) the hygienic service, which studies the relation

The forecasting of destructive wind storms and floods was especially in mind when fram-ing the act of congress that legalized this work in 1870; all the other details have been added since then, year after year, until now the present weather bureau has probably five times as many employes and does twenty times as much work annually as was done during the first year of its establishment; there can be no doubt but that in the future other branches of cognate work will be imlosed upon the weather bureau as a natural consequence of its success in the past. At the central bureau in Washington and n addition to its general work for the whole country there is also the organization of an ordinary station which looks after the interests of Washington city, just as, for exam-ple, the New York station looks after that city. The work of a weather bureau station as such is, therefore very similar in all cities; the observer must be on hand before S a. m. castern time, or 5 a. m. Pacific time in San Francisco; the observation of the meteorological conditions and the preparation of a cipher telegram, which condenses forty words into four or five, goes on simulta-neously at all the regular telegraph stations throughout the United States and Canada. The dispatches are forwarded by the Western Union according to what is called the "circuit system" as adopted by General Myer in 1879, and are not only received with 1870, and are not only received with the greatest promptness and celerity at Washington, but are also dropped on the way at other stations, so that every station throughout the country can make up a more throughout the country can make up a more throughout the country can make up a more or less complete morning bulletin, and, if need be, a morning map. The maps are printed sometimes by the old cyclostyle method, but more frequently by the new method, perfected by Mr. J. Warren Smith, upon their libertles. As a result "blind" the observer in charge of the New England section. While the stations are preparing their maps and studying local indications, some one of the four forecasters at Washing ton-Dunwood, Haren, Bigelow or Morrill-la preparing the general forecasts for the states, which are examined by the chief and, after approval, immediately telegraphed to the stations and printed upon the local maps. By 11 a. m., eastern time, the printing stations, including Washington, have finished their maps and the distribution begins. Long before the messenger starts have appealed to the federal courts; out the observer in charge of the station has been besieged by cries from the im-patient telephones, "What is the weather today?" "How is the temperature?" "Where is the storm?" Will there be any "Where is the storm?" Will there be any open opposition to the dispensary. The frost?" All through the morning hours there is a steady stream of telephones and the issue is not doubtful. Protected by the federal the importers can sell cheaper than and his assistants are well-nigh beside the dispensary can buy, and it is only a themselves. When a severe storm is on hand question of time when the competition will and the central bureau is calling for extra the servations and cipher telegrams, the public, whose interests are at stake, suddenly pours in a stream of questions that keep the wires het, too hot to be handled, figuratively speak-ing. On such occasions at a moderate estimate an important station such as New York or Ch cago sends, receives and auswers on the average 2,000 cipher telegrams and telephonic dispatches per day. None but an expert or a Weather bureau observer can

WEATHER MAPS.

The maps to which we have referred are ow printed in larger numbers than formerly, large part of the country. In many cities his sent in the senate and run for collections of maps are displayed in the schools and form the basis for excellent discourse of his remarks he has been course of his remarks he has been weather to the lower grade of scholars in the public schools, and we have been credibly informed that, especially in Brooklyn, the study of the weather has interested many teachers and scholars. Modern education demands that the youth shall study nature as well as books; flowers, birds and geologi-cal specimens are not always at hand, but the weather offers a very excellent substi-tute, and is always present, especially around New York, New England and the lake region. All our great storms move up toward these favored localities; therefore, the number of storms per year is greater in here than anywhere clae in the country. Any teacher or scholar who will take the pains to keep his own record of storms and compare it with his observations of the phases of the mean will soon find out how little she has to do with us; he will also find that the equinoctial storm is a myth that disappears when confronted with faithful coords. There is no subject with which mankind has interwoven more erroneous ideas then the weather and the atmosphere; but wind and rain and sunshine are so exsential to every form of human life and activity that one may be pardoned if in the absence of better knowledge man sometimes goes astray.

Those who were fortunate enough to receive his endorsement considered it couldness the converse of the country. If see who were fortunate enough to receive his endorsement considered it coulvaient to delection. Now, all discuss the disgensary and metropolitan police questions regardless of his views. Time was when such temerity would have meant certain defeat.

Another class that will have cause to regret the downfail of the dispensary system except the downfai the number of storms per year is greater goos astray.

The people with very few exceptions, have long slumbered in the belief that the weather is too complex a matter to be understood by man, and that it is perfectly possible and proper for the creator to occasionally stir things up contrary to the regular course of nature as established by him. But tow that my fellow citizens have, on numberless occasions, realized that we know something, though not yet all, about the atmosphere, they will. I hope, agree with me that not only the atmosphere but every minutest atom in the material world is governed by laws that God does not change after he has once established them. And yet even this conviction ought not to lead us to fatalism. Man's will is still supreme; he is the ism. THE EXPERIMENT PAILED.

South Carolina's Liquoz Dispensary System Not a Success. South Carolina is about to witness the enforced abandonment of one of the most interesting experiments ever made-the famous liquor dispensing system.

One night in December, 1892, writes correspondent of the Boston Transcript, Governor Tillman, then on the crest of the twenty, and even thirty or forty years; some prohibition debate. A prohibition primary sonian in 1848, or by Prof. Espy in 1856, and ning defeat. The bill under discussion was thers belong to the system started in 1817 in accordance with this result. Tillman was rupted the speaker, who held the undi-vided attention of his audience.

With Governor Tillman in the gallery there were a number of women. One, a young and pretry girls from Athens, Ga., finally grew tired of the eloquence of Mr. Childs, and, turning to the governor, asked him why they did not resort to the dis-pensary system, as in vogue in Athens, as a solution to the question. Tillman was not a well informed man in those days, and frankly admitted that he knew very little about the Albens system. He expressed -some interest, however, and the young woman-one of the few in thousands who interest themselves in details—rapidly out-lined it to him. The novelty of the idea struck him, and, excusing himself, he went straight to the executive office, called him licuterants in the house around him, and be fore daylight had framed a bill, the first dispensary bill, for introduction. An "administration" measure, it was passed over all opposition and Mr. Childs speech was thrown away. The explanation for this new departure to the explanation for this new departure, the people, who had expected a simon-pure prohibition law, was short, and so far as Gavernor Tillman's adherents were concerned, satisfactory. By restricting and erned, sabisfactory. By restricting and regulating the sale it would, it was claimed, liminish drunkenness and abolish a majorty of the evils charged to the bar rooms system. It would protect the health as well as the morals of the people by furnishing them with only chemically pure liquors, and t would, furthermore, pay $1,000,000 yearly ito the state treasury, more than enough to run the state government and public school system. In short, it would relieve the tax-payers of state taxes. But despite all this the institution was re-ceived with the reverse of favor. The conservative or anti-Tillman element refused to moral questions involved, and with few ex-ceptions denounced it. The "reformers" even resented having to sign their names to were opened in every patronized in much the same spirit that the Bostonians threw the tea into the water. To overcome these violations the metropolitan police system was inaugurated. This only multiplied the opposition to the dispensary system. Charleston had been unsually submissive before the metropolians were put in charge, but since then neither money nor pains have been spared to uproot the system. The state courts be-ing hopelessly closed against them, they and the recent decision of Judge Simonton, protecting the importation and sale of liquor in original packages, has settled the ques-Already dozens of original tion finally.

Governor Ellerbee, whose election was due to a promise to remove the metro from Charleston—a promise which he subsequently thought better of, seems determined to fight to the last ditch. Before his elec-tion he was not considered a dispensary ad-vocate; but now be devotes the greater part of his time to building men of straw for the federal court to knock down. He has what a comfort the telephone is and what a nulsence it can easily become in the midst of various perplexing duties.

By preserving these the recipients accumulate an interesting record of the weather from day to day over a large part of the country. The normal school in Washington was, we believe the first to introduce the study of the weather to the lower grade of scholars by the reality of the lower grade of scholars by the reality of the lower grade of scholars by the reality of the lower grade of scholars by the reality of the lower grade of scholars by the reality of the lower grade of scholars by the reality of the lower grade of scholars by the reality of the lower grade of scholars by the reality of the lower grade of scholars by the reality of the lower grade of scholars. running for governor, and there are not a few who would offer even money on his de-feat if he did. For he is not as strong now as when he went to the senate, and the risk would be too great to run at this time. Some say that he will have trouble retaining his seat when his term expires in 1900, and his weakness is all traceable to the dispensary. To give an idea of how much strength he has lost no longer than two years ago exery candidate of the reform faction boasted of his loyalty to Tillman. Those who were fortunate enough to receive his endorsement considered it equivalent to election. Now all discuss the dispensary

Now he says the original package houses are I cannot but be reminded of a little in-supplying his customers, to whom he sold at o.re time as much as 1,700 gallons of whisky in a single day. This occupation, like Othello's, is gone, and a return to ordi-nary profits is not welcome, for all the show
