

ESCAPED FROM THE BULL PEN

Probably the Most Thrilling Incident of Prison Life During the War.

EXPERIENCE OF A SOUTHERN CONSCRIPT

He Joined the Southern Army, Was Captured and Sentenced to Be Shot—Leaped the Stockade and Disappeared.

James Walker was born near Knoxville, in East Tennessee, about the year 1833, so that he was in his 25th year when our civil war began. He had a fair common school education and learned the trade of a machinist, at which he was an expert. When 26 years of age Walker was offered the position of master mechanic in the railroad machine shop in Atlanta, Ga. Being a single man, he accepted the offer, though, like all east Tennesseans, his devotion to the mountains of his native state was one of the strongest impulses of his life.

Walker was a strong union man, as were all his mountain kinsmen, but when Georgia seceded he found it would be dangerous to express his views, so he kept them to himself, resolving in the meantime to escape to the north and join the union forces at the first opportunity. The conscript laws were early enforced in the south. Planters with large estates, professional men and mechanics, although forced into the service, where they did not volunteer—an most of them gallantly did—were exempted, under the impression that their services would be more valuable to the confederacy if they were permitted to remain back at their usual vocations. In this way Walker, although sworn into the service of the confederacy, was detailed to remain in charge of the same shop.

ESCAPED FROM ATLANTA.

The war had been going on for eight months when Walker, who had carefully prepared his plans, escaped from Atlanta one Saturday night, and before his flight was discovered he had reached friends in the Cumberland mountains. With a month, for the man was a born leader, Walker recruited 127 mountaineers, and, without any warrant, swore them into the union service. With these men he was in buttermilk and armed with old-fashioned hunting rifles, Walker traveled by night through the lines of Kirby Smith and succeeded in reaching the union forces under Nelson, in central Kentucky.

IN AN INSTANT THE STRETCHER WAS AGAINST THE STOCKADE AND WALKER HAD SEIZED THE TOP.

Walker received a captain's commission and he and his men were regularly mustered into the service, but instead of being consolidated into one of the many east Tennessee units they remained a separate command, known as "Walker's Scouts." Because of their great familiarity with the country over which the army of east Tennessee and of the Cumberland were then operating, Walker and his men were the greatest service, and it may be added, that it would be impossible to find in either army a harder, handier or a more desperate body of mounted men.

I first met Walker at Chattanooga, a few weeks before the effective battle of Lookout and Missionary Ridge. He had come through the enemy's lines alone, with a message for help from Burnside, then starving in Knoxville.

HIS PERSONALITY. His hair and beard were light brown, and his eyes the only gray eyes I ever saw—the only eyes of any color, indeed—that seemed to flash fire when he became excited. Although his voice was low and his manner almost effeminate, the veriest tyro in physiognomy could not be in Walker's company ten minutes without feeling the magnetism of his untiring courage and superb manhood. Walker and I became decidedly friendly during the short time I spent at Chattanooga. Three weeks after he had started back to Burnside we had had our big fight and in the hot pursuit of Grant that followed I was captured, with some sixty men. All the union prisoners were sent on to the "bull pen," the wire enclosure in Atlanta, from which point the officers were forwarded to Libby prison, and the enlisted men to Belle Isle, in the James river.

It was a cold, sleety evening in early December when we were marched from the cars at Atlanta to the Bull Pen at the foot of the town. The enclosure was more than ankle deep in mud. In less than the space of half an acre 4,000 shivering men were packed. About the center of the enclosure there were two brick piles, remnants of the chimneys of a house that had been burned down. As I was stiff, my horse having fallen on me when he was shot, my comrades helped me to the chimneys, and made me a seat of some of the bricks.

CHAINED TO A HUNDRED-POUND SHOT.

I sat down and had just uttered a groan, caused by mental rather than physical suffering, when my attention was attracted by the clanking of a chain near by. Looking quickly up I was surprised and shocked to see the tall form of Captain Singler standing over me. About his right ankle there was a heavy iron ring, and fastened to this a log chain, at the other end of which was an iron ball that looked like a 100-pound shot. The ball the captain carried on his shoulder with the greatest ease, but he dropped it beside me and made a seat of it, when he took my hand in both of his and whispered as he swung it:

"My cap, but I am glad to see you here."

"Glad to see me here, Walker?" I repeated.

"That's what I said, old fellow."

"Well, I don't like to hate any man as much as I'd like to see him in this pen, and I waved my hands at the guards on the high platform above the stockade, and the poor fellows struggling through the mud to keep warm, bending nearer and sinking his voice to the low, soft pitch that seemed so out of keeping with his character, Walker said:

"God knows I'm not glad to see you a prisoner, old fellow, and you know it, too. But, as you see, here he shook the chain. 'I am in a bad fix, and I'm here waiting for some man to show up that I know has the interest in me to see me through.'"

"You can count on me and my boys, Walker," I responded. "But what does this ball and chain mean on a prisoner of war and an officer?"

"That is just it," he hastened to say. "I am not regarded as a Federal soldier, as they call our people."

"How then do they regard you?" I asked, though knowing much of his past I half guessed at the truth. In his unusually quiet way Walker went on to explain his former position in Atlanta, and how he had been conscripted, and then detailed to work in the railroad shops. After his escape to the union lines he had been set down as a deserter, and as he had retained his own name and had become a conspicuous figure in the war, a reward was offered for his capture.

Ten days before our meeting in the prison pen Walker had been captured in a cavalry fight at Campbell's station in East Tennessee. As soon as he reached the depot in Atlanta he was recognized. He was tried the Monday before our meeting, which was on Thursday evening, and he was condemned to be shot. After his escape to the depot on about twelve hours off.

"Now the ball and chain is explained," said the condemned man in conclusion, and he quietly proceeded to light his pipe. The pen was fenced in by logs set on end in the ground. On the outside and four feet lower than the top of the stockade there was a platform on which guards walked every ten paces. Inside the stockade and fifteen feet away there was a little ditch known as "the dead line," which prisoners could not cross under pain of death. This line was indicated at night by rows of dim lamps. These lamps were being lit while I talked with Walker. The chances for escape were practically nil, and with that ball and chain attached any attempt meant death from the guards, yet I could not help saying:

A PLAN FOR ESCAPE.

"If you must die, Walker, go right up to the dead line and fall under the piles of the Home Guards; better that than to be led out and shot down like a dog."

"I can slip the ball and chain off," said Walker, and he demonstrated that this could be done by removing his boot and stocking, then he straightened out his long foot and with a slight effort freed himself from the ring.

"With the help of yourself and other friends," he went on to say, "I believe I can get over the stockade and make my escape, and that there is a veteran brigade in camp about the place."

Near where we sat there was a stretcher, the body and handles of which were about ten feet in length. A belt fastened across the ends would make a step or resting place fully eight feet from the ground if the stretcher were set on end. Walker, as his hands were a born leader, Walker recruited 127 mountaineers, and, without any warrant, swore them into the union service. With these men he was in buttermilk and armed with old-fashioned hunting rifles, Walker traveled by night through the lines of Kirby Smith and succeeded in reaching the union forces under Nelson, in central Kentucky.

Walker received a captain's commission and he and his men were regularly mustered into the service, but instead of being consolidated into one of the many east Tennessee units they remained a separate command, known as "Walker's Scouts." Because of their great familiarity with the country over which the army of east Tennessee and of the Cumberland were then operating, Walker and his men were the greatest service, and it may be added, that it would be impossible to find in either army a harder, handier or a more desperate body of mounted men.

I first met Walker at Chattanooga, a few weeks before the effective battle of Lookout and Missionary Ridge. He had come through the enemy's lines alone, with a message for help from Burnside, then starving in Knoxville.

ANXIOUS MOMENTS.

After 9 o'clock the guards called out the half hours and the number of their posts. When the man at post No. 10 announced 10 o'clock Walker was to rush with the stretcher for the southern wall. As the hour approached the men with the bricks crawled close to the dead line as was safe. The night was very dark, with a cold, driving rain from the northeast. About five minutes before 10 o'clock the men were to come from the enemy. Walker crept to my side, clasped me in his arms and whispered:

"God bless you, old fellow! Another hour and I'll be a free man or a dead one."

In the indistinct light from the dead line I saw the tall form bending over the stretcher. The minutes were cruelly long to Walker's friends, but they knew they had to wait. At length the cry began. Twelve o'clock; post No. 1, and all's well! The men with the bricks sat there and their breathing came hard.

"Twelve o'clock; post No. 10, and all's well!"

The last word had not died on the lips of the guard when thirty men leaped from the ground and the missile began. I threw one brick in a wild way, then turned to watch Walker.

With a rapidity that cannot be described he dashed over the dead line to the south, from which, as he made his way, he heard the heavy bricks. The last time I saw him was in the pen of Sherman's men in Washington at the close of the war.

"Oh, lots of times," replied the sweet child.

"And what does she say, Harry?"

"She says she's always glad to have you come here when she's feelin' all wore out as I feel."

"And," continued the delighted young man, "does she ever explain why she likes to have me come at such times?"

"Yes, she says you're easy on the eyes, and I sleep and still keep you guessing."

FANCY PRICES FOR HOGS

Annual Sales Bring Together Many Noted Swine Breeders.

GROWTH OF POLAND-CHINA ASSOCIATION

Breeders in Seventeen States and Territories Now Enjoy Membership in the Standard—Record Makes a Big Book.

MARYVILLE, Mo., Oct. 26.—(Special.)—The Poland-China hog has within the last few years come to be recognized as one of the leaders of swine, and to organization in the country has contributed more toward its development than the Standard Poland-China Record association, whose headquarters are in Maryville. There are only four Poland-China associations in the country, the three beside the one whose headquarters are here being the American, with headquarters at West Liberty, Ia.; the Central, with headquarters at Indianapolis, Ind., and the Ohio, with headquarters at Dayton, O. Of these the Standard is the youngest and is second in size, the Central only having a larger membership.

The Standard Poland-China Record association was created in this section of the country by the Northwest Missouri Poland-China Breeders' association, which was organized in February, 1884, pursuant to a call by W. P. Hayzlett of Bolckow, Mo. Of this organization W. P. Hayzlett was elected president and George L. Drennan of Maryville secretary and ex-officio treasurer. The twelve men who first formed the organization were: W. P. Hayzlett of Bolckow, E. P. Carver of Guilford, I. V. LaTourrette of Skidmore, D. D. Hallinger of Hopkins, B. F. Gilmore of Gaynor City, S. Cunningham of John W. Dean, Frank Billows, William T. Garrett, Ira K. Alderman, Lyman Parcher and George L. Drennan.

The association had a successful career, but was not broadly enough conceived, and in 1885, at the suggestion of one of the members, the members, and after considerable discussion a committee "to inquire into and report on the feasibility and practicability of organizing a new association" was appointed. This committee was organized and received and accepted in February, 1886, and the standard association, with 100 shares and including members from Iowa, Kansas, Nebraska, Illinois and Indiana, was organized. The first officers were: President, D. F. Risk, Weston, Mo.; vice president, J. W. Dean, Maryville, Mo.; W. H. Harris, Indianapolis, Ind.; W. A. Egan, Lancaster, Pa.; H. E. Hays, Bolckow, Mo.; secretary, Ira K. Alderman, Maryville, Mo.; treasurer, W. T. Garrett, Maryville, Mo.; and the new organization was incorporated under the laws of Missouri, and since then its growth has been rapid. Now it has 480 members, in eighteen states and territories—Missouri, Iowa, Illinois, Kansas, Nebraska, Texas, Colorado, California, Oregon, Kentucky, Mississippi, Ohio, Indiana, Arkansas, Oklahoma, Arizona and South Dakota.

OBJECT OF ASSOCIATION.

The object and purpose for which the association was formed are said in the constitution to be: "The establishment of an improved system of recording and tracing pure-bred Poland-China swine and the publication of a record." That its object and purpose have been attained is demonstrated by the record which is issued annually. From a volume of 564 pages in 1886 it grew to one of 1,422 pages in 1896.

Meetings of the association are held annually in Maryville on the first Wednesday in February. They are attended by members from all the states and territories represented in its membership and the annual banquet, when hundreds of the hog men meet around the festal board, is one of the events of the year in northwest Missouri.

The members of the association are among the wealthiest and most prominent citizens of their respective localities, for to deal very extensively in Poland-Chinas nowadays a man must have considerable money and be willing to take chances on heavy losses. The fact that Maryville is the headquarters of the standard association draws many big sales here, and to those not interested in the stock the prices sometimes paid for a fine boar or sow appears almost fabulous. Last Wednesday, at the sale of Frank Dunning of Bedford and W. A. Jones of Van Meter, Ia., which was held in Maryville and which was attended by many hog fanciers from Missouri and Iowa, Nebraska, Illinois, Indiana and Kansas, one sow sold for $285, one boar for $250, another boar for $105, and another for $175. George W. Null of Maryville paid $1,000 for a great hog, a "Poland-China," Liggett & Judd of St. Joseph $1,000 for "Clay Chief," and for the great hog, "Look-Me-Over," a syndicate composed of Liggett & Judd of St. Joseph, Lackner Brothers of Maryville, J. West Jones of Lenox, Ia., and a few others, paid $3,500 last spring. The animal was bought, of course, for breeding purposes, and his pigs will have hereafter, bring big prices. There are dozens of hogs owned by members of the association which are valued at from $500 to $1,000.

To most people these prices appear very large, but the hog fanciers have a serene conviction that the bottom will not "drop out," contrary to the expectations of outsiders.

The big sales never fail to draw men from all over the country, and are events of considerable interest. They are always auction sales, and James W. Sparks of Marshall, Mo., J. West Jones of Lenox, Ia., and P. M. Woolf of New York are the best known swine auctioneers in this section.

The fine pigs are driven into the ring one at a time and cried off like any other article of merchandise. The pigs are the best of those which are properly called the "standard breeders' sales," and which occur every February at the annual meeting in Maryville. The pigs which are eligible to enter stock in these sales, and some of the finest porkers of the world have been disposed of at them. At the

A Pertinent Question.

During the last political campaign, relates the San Francisco Argonaut, an ardent supporter of the proverbial long flowing beard, was delivering a speech somewhere in the wilds of Kansas. During the course of his remarks he said: "Fellow citizens, it is necessary for the welfare of our country that silver should be kept at its face value. If the government marks a dollar a dollar it follows that it must be worth one hundred cents." A voice coming from the rear of the crowd interrupted him, saying: "Excuse me, Mr. Speaker; may I ask a question?" "Certainly, sir," replied the popular
